

EX LIBRIS

THREE CENTURIES

OF

Southern Poetry

(1607-1907)

CARL HOLLIDAY, M.A.

Professor of English Literature, Cox College, Atlanta. Author of
A History of Southern Literature, The Cotton-Picker and Other Poems, Etc.

NASHVILLE, TENN.; DALLAS, TEX.
PUBLISHING HOUSE OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH
SMITH & LAMAR, AGENTS

918u H739
the

COPYRIGHT, 1908,

BY

SMITH & LAMAR.

ANDERSON

On

THAT MOST PLEASANT OF MEN AND MOST ZEALOUS OF TEACHERS,

Dr. Charles William Kent

MA 7136

PREFACE.

WITHIN the last decade the interest in Southern literature has become widespread. Nearly every Southern college and university now offers a course in the subject, and the summer schools and Chautauquas frequently make it a special feature. All this is as it should be. There are Southern writers scarcely known by name to-day who are deserving of careful attention. Especially is this true among the Southern poets, who, amidst prosperity and adversity, have sung songs of gladness and of sorrow that stand among the finest productions in American literature. How few of them are intimately, lovingly known at the present day!

This collection is made in the hope that still further interest may be aroused. Other collections have been made, but they have dealt almost entirely with the poets living in the first sixty years of the nineteenth century. In the present compilation specimens are given from three centuries of Southern verse—from 1607 to 1907. Because of this fact the book, it is hoped, will be of interest not only to students of literature, but also to students of history and to lovers of the old and curious in general.

In the preparation of this work many courtesies have been extended to me. To the publishers and holders of copyrights whose kind permission to use selections has been granted me, I make grateful acknowledgments. My special thanks are due Dr. W. P. Trent, of Columbia University, Dr. William H. Browne, of Johns Hopkins University, Mrs. Janey Hope Marr, of Blacksburg, Va., Messrs. Brentano, of New York, and B. F. Johnson Publishing Company, the authorized publishers of Timrod's poems. Without their help this volume could not have reached its present form.

CARL HOLLIDAY.

Cox College, Atlanta.

CONTENTS.

I.

THE BEGINNINGS.

(1607-1740.)

	AGE.
R. RICH, GENT.....	17
Newes from Virginia.....	17
JOHN SMITH (1579-1631).....	19
The Sea Mark.....	19
GEORGE SANDYS (1578-1644).....	20
Procne's Revenge.....	21
GEORGE ALSOP (1638-16—).....	22
Upon a Purple Cap.....	22
ANONYMOUS	23
Bacon's Epitaph (1676).....	23
EBENEZER COOK.....	25
The Sot-Weed Factors.....	25
He Meets a Quaker.....	25
He Goes to Court.....	26

II.

THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD.

(1740-1815.)

ANONYMOUS	30
Virginia Hearts of Oak.....	30
CHARLES HENRY WHARTON (1748-).....	31
The Eulogy of George Washington.....	32
HUGH HENRY BRACKENRIDGE (1748-1816).....	32
Warren's Last Words.....	33
From "The Death of General Montgomery".....	34
ST. GEORGE TUCKER (1752-1828).....	34
Days of My Youth.....	35

	PAGE.
WILLIAM MUNFORD (1775-1825).....	36
The Triumph of Hector.....	36
JOHN SHAW (1778-1809).....	38
Song	38
WASHINGTON ALLSTON (1779-1843).....	39
Immortality	39
On the Late S. T. Coleridge.....	40
FRANCIS SCOTT KEY (1779-1843).....	40
The Star-Spangled Banner.....	41
WILLIAM MAXWELL (1784-1857).....	43
To a Fair Lady.....	43
To Anne.....	43
RICHARD DABNEY (1787-1825).....	44
An Epigram Imitated from Archias.....	44
Youth and Age.....	45

III.

THE PERIOD OF EXPANSION.

(1815-1850.)

RICHARD HENRY WILDE (1789-1847).....	50
Stanzas	50
To the Mocking Bird.....	51
A Farewell to America.....	51
MIRABEAU BONAPARTE LAMAR (1798-1859).....	53
The Daughter of Mendoza.....	53
EDWARD COATE PINKNEY (1802-1825).....	54
A Health.....	55
Votive Song.....	55
A Serenade.....	57
GEORGE DENISON PRENTICE (1802-1870).....	57
Lines to a Lady.....	58
The Closing Year.....	58
WILLIAM GILMORE SIMMS (1806-1870).....	61
The Grapevine Swing.....	62
The Lost Pleiad.....	62
Song in March.....	64

	PAGE.
EDGAR ALLAN POE (1809-1849).....	65
Israfel	67
The Bells.....	69
Annabel Lee.....	72
The Raven.....	73
To One in Paradise.....	79
The Conqueror Worm.....	80
ALBERT PIKE (1809-1891).....	82
To the Mocking Bird.....	82
To Spring.....	84
Every Year.....	86
ALEXANDER BEAUFORT MEEK (1814-1865).....	88
Land of the South.....	88
The Mocking Bird.....	90
PHILIP PENDLETON COOKE (1816-1850).....	92
Florence Vane.....	92
SEVERN TEACKLE WALLIS (1816-1894).....	94
The Blessed Hand.....	94
AMELIA WELBY (1819-1852).....	97
Twilight at Sea.....	97
To a Seashell.....	97
THEODORE O'HARA (1820-1867).....	98
The Bivouac of the Dead.....	98

IV.

THE CIVIL WAR PERIOD.

(1850-1875.)

PLANTATION MELODIES.....	107
Mourner's Song.....	108
Roll, Jordan, Roll.....	108
Heaven	109
Swing Low, Sweet Chariot.....	109
The Dead.....	109
In de Mornin'.....	110
Savannah Freeman's Song.....	110
Lay Dis Body Down.....	111
Stars Begin to Fall.....	111

	PAGE.
CIVIL WAR SONGS.....	111
Call All.....	112
The Bonnie Blue Flag.....	113
The Soldier Boy.....	115
MARGARET PRESTON (1820-1897).....	116
Calling the Angels In.....	116
The Hero of the Commune.....	118
The Shade of the Trees.....	119
A Grave in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond.....	120
There'll Come a Day.....	122
FRANCIS ORRERY TICKNOR (1822-1874).....	122
Little Giffen.....	123
Virginians of the Valley.....	124
JOHN REUBEN THOMPSON (1823-1873).....	125
Music in Camp.....	126
The Battle Rainbow.....	128
JAMES MATHEWES LEGARE (1823-1859).....	130
Ahab Mohammed.....	130
To a Lily.....	132
JAMES BARRON HOPE (1827-1887).....	133
From "Arms and the Man".....	133
From "The Charge at Balaklava".....	136
Three Summer Studies.....	137
Sunset on Hampton Roads.....	140
HENRY TIMROD (1829-1867).....	141
Sonnet	142
The Summer Bower.....	143
Carolina	145
The Cotton Boll.....	147
PAUL HAMILTON HAYNE (1830-1886).....	152
Lyric of Action.....	154
Aëthra	155
My Study.....	156
The Mocking Bird.....	156
The Pine's Mystery.....	157
October	158

	PAGE.
JAMES RYDER RANDALL (1839-1908).....	158
Maryland	159
ABRAM JOSEPH RYAN (1839-1886).....	161
The Conquered Banner.....	162
Night Thoughts.....	164
The Sword of Robert Lee.....	165
Song of the Mystic.....	166

V.

THE NEW SOUTH.

(1875-1907.)

SIDNEY LANIER (1842-1881).....	173
A Ballad of Trees and the Master.....	175
The Marshes of Glynn.....	175
Song of the Chattahoochee.....	180
JOHN HENRY BONER (1845-).....	182
Poe's Cottage at Fordham.....	182
The Light'ood Fire.....	184
JOHN BANISTER TABB (1845-).....	185
The Half-Ring Moon.....	185
My Star.....	186
GEORGE HERBERT SASS (1845-).....	186
In a King-Cambyses Vein.....	186
CARLYLE MCKINLEY (1847-1904).....	188
Sapelo	189
WILL HENRY THOMPSON (1848-).....	191
The High Tide at Gettysburg.....	191
ROBERT BURNS WILSON (1850-).....	194
Dedication	194
The Death of Winter.....	195
IRWIN RUSSELL (1853-1879).....	196
Christmas Night in the Quarters.....	197
SAMUEL MINTURN PECK (1854-).....	206
Bessie Brown, M.D.....	207
The Captain's Feather.....	208
The Grapevine Swing.....	209
Phyllis	210

	PAGE.
WILLIAM HAMILTON HAYNE (1856-).....	212
The Yule Log.....	212
Sleep and His Brother Death.....	212
FRANK L. STANTON (1857-).....	213
Comes One with a Song.....	213
Light on the Hills.....	214
HENRY JEROME STOCKARD (1858-).....	215
Homer	216
YATES SNOWDEN (1858-).....	216
A Carolina Bourbon.....	217
DANSKE DANDRIDGE (1859-).....	219
The Dead Moon.....	220
The Spirit and the Wood Sparrow.....	222
BENJAMIN SLEDD (1864-).....	223
The Children.....	223
MADISON CAWEIN (1865-).....	224
The Whippoorwill.....	224
Disenchantment of Death.....	225
Love and a Day.....	227
LIZETTE WOODWORTH REESE (1856-).....	228
In Sorrow's Hour.....	228
WALTER MALONE (1866-).....	229
A Portrait of Henry Timrod.....	229
NOTES	231
BIBLIOGRAPHY	260
INDEX	263

I.

THE BEGINNINGS.

(1607-1740.)

GENERAL SURVEY.

IN the hundred and thirty years included between the dates 1607 and 1740 we find a period of wonderful events. A vast, unknown continent was entered; a wilderness was conquered; a unique type of civilization was founded; and, amid heroic endeavors and untold suffering, a new nation had advanced to that stage where it could no longer remain subordinate to another. There was an admirable energy in the characters of these pioneers, and the story of their onward march is epic in itself; but the fact must be recognized that such a form of life could not be conducive to the production, at that time, of literature and of the fine arts in general. Strenuous labor and ever-present hardships left but little time and less inclination for the higher, subtler, and more refined phases of life.

Yet in the South, as well as in the North, there were some efforts toward literary expression. Crude they may have been; yet they should be remembered as prophecies, if for nothing else, of greater things to come. In the early years of the period the writings were full of wonder; men had never before seen such vastness in nature. But in the latter years we find a great earnestness and even a bitterness pervading the literature. Bacon's Rebellion had roused the people, and now America was in the midst of what John Fiske has called "the century of political education," extending from 1676 to 1776. All this is seen most clearly in the prose of the period; but here and there it may be traced in the poetry also.

R. RICH, GENT.

Scarcely anything is known about this writer. It is not even certain that this was his true name. According to his own statement he was "one of the voyage" to Virginia in 1609, and it is believed that he returned to England during the next year. His Newes from Virginia, extracts from which are given here, was published in 1610.

NEWES FROM VIRGINIA

Of the happy arrival of that famous and worthy knight, Sir Thomas Gates, and well reputed and valiant Captaine Newport into England.

It is no idle fabulous tale, nor is it fayned newes:
For Truth herself is heere arriv'd, because you should not muse.

With her both Gates and Newport come, to tell Report doth lye,*

Which did devulge unto the world, that they at sea did dye.

• • • • •
5 The seas did rage, the windes did blowe, distressed were they then;

Their ship did leake, her tacklings break, in daunger were her men.

But heaven may pylotte in this storme, and to an iland nere,

Bermoothawes call'd, conducted them, which did abate their fears.

• • • • •
To kill these swyne, to yield them foode that little had to eate,

- 10 Their store was spent, and all things scant, alas!
 they wanted meate.
 A thousand hogges that dogge did kill, their hunger to sustaine,
 And with such foode did in that ile two and forty weekes remaine.

.
 And so unto Virginia came, where these brave soldiers finde
 The English-men opprest with greife and discontent in minde.

- 15 They seem'd distracted and forlorne, for those two worthyes losse,
 Yet at their home returne they joyd, amongst them some were crosse.

.
 Where they unto their labour fall, as men that meane to thrive,
 Let's pray that heaven may blesse them all, and keep them long alive.
 Those men that vagrants liv'd with us, have there deserved well;

- 20 Their governour writes in their praise, as divers letters tel.

And to th' adventurers thus he writes be not dis-may'd at all,
 For scandall cannot doe us wrong, God will not let us fall.
 Let England knowe our willingness, for that our worke is goode
 Wee hope to plant a nation, where none before hath stood.*

-
 25 The number of adventurers, that are for this plantation,
 Are full eight hundred worthy men, some noble,
 all of fashion.

Good, discrete, their worke is good, and as they have begun,
May Heaven assist them in their worke, and thus our newes is done.

JOHN SMITH.

(1579-1631.)

Captain John Smith's fame is so great that a detailed account of his life is unnecessary here. He was born at Willoughby, England, and, according to his own statements, passed through many thrilling and romantic adventures in his youth. He reached America in April, 1607, and immediately became the leading spirit in the colonizing movements. A most versatile man, he undertook any task that was placed before him—building houses, hunting, governing men, exploring the wilderness, drawing maps, writing books, fighting Indians, organizing new colonies, and even essaying poetry. His last years were spent in England, where he was considered an authority in all matters connected with the New World. He died in London in 1631. The selection given here was published in that year.

THE SEA MARK.

(Advertisements* for the unexperienced planters of New England.)

Aloof, aloof, and come no near.
The dangers do appear
Which, if my ruin had not been,
You had not seen:

5 I only lie upon this shelf
 To be a mark to all
 Which on the same might fall,
 That none may perish but myself.

If in or outward you be bound,
 10 Do not forget to sound;
 Neglect of that was cause of this
 To steer amiss.
 The seas were calm, the wind was fair,
 That made me so secure
 15 That now I must endure
 All weathers, be they foul or fair.

The winter's cold, the summer's heat,
 Alternatively beat
 Upon my bruised sides, that rue,
 20 That no relief can ever come:
 But why should I despair,
 Being promised so fair
 That there shall be a day of Doom?

GEORGE SANDYS.

(1578-1644.)

The first genuine piece of literature written in America was George Sandys's translation of Ovid's* Metamorphoses, a work of such merit as to receive hearty praise from Dryden and Pope. Sandys was born of a noble and influential family and was educated at Oxford. Before his appointment as treasurer of the Virginia Company, in 1621, he had published the first five books of his translation of Ovid, and upon his departure for the New World he was urged by many men of note to continue the task till finished. Here, in the rude wilderness and during one of the bloodiest massacres in all colonial history, he wrote the remainder of the poem, having, to use his own words, "wars and tumults to bring it to light instead of the Muses." These ten books appeared in 1626. Sandys died in Kent, England, in the spring of 1644.

PROCNE'S REVENGE.

(Procne, avenging the unfaithfulness of her husband, King Tereus, slays and prepares for his table their own beloved son. After eating heartily, the king calls for his little boy, Itys.)

Procne could not disguise her cruel joy,
 In full fruition of her horrid ire,
 Thou hast, said she, within thee thy desire.
 He looks about, asks where; and while again
 5 He asks and calls, all bloody with the slain, Forth like a Fury, Philomela flew
 And at his face the head of Itys threw;
 Nor ever more than now desired a tongue
 To express the joy of her revenged wrong.
 10 He with loud outcries doth the board repel,
 And calls the Furies from the depths of hell;
 Now tears his breast, and strives from thence in vain
 To pull the abhorred food; now weeps amain
 And calls himself his son's unhappy tomb;
 15 Then draws his sword and through the guilty room
 Pursues the sisters who appear with wings
 To cut the air; and so they did. One sings
 In woods; the other near the house remains
 And on her breast yet bears her murder's stains.

- ²⁰ He, swift with grief and fury, in that space
 His person changed. Long tufts of feathers grace
 His shining crown; his sword a bill became;
 His face all armed; whom we a lapwing name.

GEORGE ALSOP.

(1638-16—.)

George Alsop emigrated from England to Maryland in 1658 and remained there for five years. He wrote an interesting account of his experiences in America, which was published in 1666 under the title, A Character of the Province of Mary-Land. The selection given is from this work which, however, is, for the most part, in prose. Of Alsop's life after his return to England scarcely anything is known.

UPON A PURPLE CAP.*

- Hail from the dead, or from Eternity,
 Thou Velvet Relique of Antiquity;
 Thou which appear'st here in thy purple hue,
 Tell's how the dead within their tombs do do;
⁵ How those ghosts fare within each marble cell,
 Where amongst them for ages thou didst dwell.
 What brain didst cover there? Tell us that we Upon our knees vail hats to honor thee;
 And if no honor's due, tell us whose pate
¹⁰ Thou basely coveredst, and we'll jointly hate!
 Let's know his name, that we may show neglect;
 If otherwise, we'll kiss thee with respect.
 Say, didst thou cover Noll's * old brazen head,
 Which on the top of Westminster * high lead

- 15 Stands on a pole, erected to the sky,
 As a grand trophy to his memory?
 From his perfidious skull didst thou fall down
 In a disdain to honor such a crown
 With three-pile velvet?* Tell me, hadst thou thy fall
- 20 From the high top of that Cathedral?

BACON'S EPITAPH.

(1676.)

The first literary result of Bacon's Rebellion was the Burwell Papers, so named because of the family in whose possession the manuscript so long remained. Although written in 1676, it was not widely known until 1814, when the Massachusetts Historical Society published it. Opening in the midst of a description of an Indian fight (for the first pages are lost), the story tells of the savage atrocities, the plea to Bacon to lead the people, the war and his brave career in it, his sad and mysterious death, the deceitful endeavors of his worthless successor, Ingram, and, through it all, the admiration and love for the heroic leader. The writer is not known. The body of the book is in prose, but near the close is found the following selection:

Death, why so cruel? What! No other way
 To manifest thy spleen,* but thus to slay
 Our hopes of safety, liberty, our all,
 Which, through thy tyranny, with him must fall
 5 To its late chaos?

Now we must complain,
 Since thou, in him, hast more than thousand slain,
 Whose lives and safeties did so much depend
 On him their life, with him their lives must end.

- 10 Who now must heal those wounds, or stop that blood
 The Heathen made, and drew into a flood?
 Who is't must plead our cause? Nor trump nor drum
 Nor Deputations; these, alas! are dumb
 And cannot speak. Our Arms (though ne'er so strong)
- 15 Will want the aid of his commanding tongue
 Which conquer'd more than Cæsar. He o'erthrew
 Only the outward frame; this could subdue
 The rugged works of nature. Souls replete
 With dull chill cold, he'd animate with heat
- 20 Drawn forth of reason's limbic. In a word,
 Mars* and Minerva* both in him concurred
 For art, for arms, whose pen and sword alike,
 As Cato's* did, may admiration strike
 Into his foes; while they confess withal
- 25 It was their guilt styl'd him a criminal.
 Only this difference does from truth proceed;
 They in the guilt, he in the name must bleed.
 While none shall dare his obsequies to sing
 In deserv'd measures; until time shall bring
- 30 Truth crown'd with freedom, and from danger free
 To sound his praises to posterity.
 Here let him rest; while we this truth report
 He's gone from hence unto a higher Court
 To plead his cause, where he by this doth know
- 35 Whether to Cæsar he was friend or foe.*

EBENEZER COOK.

In 1708 there was published in London a satirical poem, entitled The Sot-Weed Factor. It had the signature "Eben. Cook, Gent.;" but doubtless this is only a pen name. The book tells the adventures of an English merchant in Virginia, especially with those persons who dealt in tobacco, or sot-weed, as it was then sometimes called. We may feel sure that the poem was not very popular in America.

THE SOT-WEED FACTORS.

With neither stocking, hat, nor shoe,
These sot-weed planters crowd the shore,
In hue as tawny as a Moor.
Figures so strange, no good designed
5 To be a part of human kind;
But wanton nature, void of rest,
Moulded the brittle clay in jest.

HE MEETS A QUAKER.

I met a Quaker, "Yea" and "Nay";
A pious, conscientious rogue,*
10 As e'er wore bonnet or a brogue,
Who neither swore* nor kept his word
But cheated in the fear of God;
And when his debts he would not pay,
By light within* he ran away.
15 With this sly zealot soon I struck
A bargain for my English truck,
Agreeing for ten thousand weight*
Of Sot-weed good and fit for freight,

Broad Oronooko* bright and sound,
 20 The growth and product of his ground;
 In cask that should contain complete
 Five hundred of tobacco neat.
 The contract thus betwixt us made,
 Not well acquainted with the trade,
 25 My goods I trusted to the cheat,
 Whose crop was then aboard the fleet;
 And, going to receive my own,
 I found the bird was newly flown.

HE GOES TO COURT.

We sat, like others, on the ground,
 30 Carousing punch in open air,
 Till crier did the court declare:

 And straight the lawyers broke the peace,
 Wrangling for plaintiff and defendant.
 I thought they ne'er would make an end on't.
 35 With nonsense, stuff, and false quotations,
 With brazen lies and allegations.
 And in the splitting of the cause,
 They used such motions with their paws,
 As showed their zeal was strongly bent
 40 In blows to end the argument.

II.

THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD.

(1740-1815.)

GENERAL SURVEY.

We now enter a period of war and not of poetry. The greatest poetry of this time was written in blood on the snowy fields of Valley Forge. It was a time when the thoughts of all Americans were turned toward the study of the common rights of man, the institutions of government, and the theory of law in general. Sentiment vented itself in oratory and finally in action, and only occasionally did some quieter soul express itself in verse. In the South especially this was true. The courthouse was the center of interest, and there eloquence was demanded. Moreover, the opportunities for publishing were very meager. We have seen that nearly all the poetry given so far was printed in England; and this custom continued far into the Revolutionary period. Governor Berkeley had made his memorable statement: "I thank God there are no free schools nor printing, and I hope we shall not have them these hundred years." From 1729 until near the Revolution there was but one printing press in Virginia, and that one was under official control; while the first newspaper, The Virginia Gazette, was not published until 1736. This, then, was the soil from which poetry must spring. Yet we find not a few striking pieces of verse.

VIRGINIA HEARTS OF OAK.

Among the few Revolutionary songs written in the South one of the most famous was the Carolina ballad, Battle of King's Mountain (1781), beginning with the lines:

'Twas on a pleasant mountain
The Tory heathen lay,
With a doughty major at their head,
One Ferguson, they say.
Cornwallis had detached him,
A thieving for to go,
And catch the Carolina men,
Or bring the rebels low.

Another well-known one was Virginia Hearts of Oak, portions of which are given here. Of course other poems were known, especially some by Rednap Howell, a North Carolina schoolmaster, the patriotism of which was far better than the technique. A Virginia woman wrote a poem about Tea—"pernicious, baleful tea:"

"With all Pandora's ills possessed;
Hyson, no more beguiled by thee,
My noble sons shall be oppressed."

However, Virginia Hearts of Oak was doubtless the most popular:

Sure never was picture drawn more to the life,
Or affectionate husband more fond of his wife,
Than America copies and loves Britain's sons,*
Who, conscious of freedom, are bold as great guns.

⁵ Hearts of oak are we still,
 For we're sons of those men
 Who always are ready—
 Steady, boys, steady—
 To fight for their freedom again and again.

.

¹⁰ To King George, as true subjects, we loyal bow down,
 But hope we may call Magna Charta* our own:
 Let the rest of the world slavish worship decree,
 Great Britain has ordered her sons to be Free!
 Hearts of oak, etc.

.

¹⁵ With Loyalty, Liberty let us entwine,
 Our blood shall for both flow as free as our wine;
 Let us set an example what all men should be,
 And a toast give the world—Here's to those who'd be Free!
 Hearts of oak, etc.

CHARLES HENRY WHARTON.

(1748- ? .)

At a time when Washington was undergoing some of the severest trials of his life, fighting not only the enemy from abroad but also the fear and jealousy of many of his own countrymen, there appeared a rather remarkable poem in his defense, A Poetical Epistle to George Washington (1778). It was a striking proof of the unpopularity in England of the war that, although the proceeds from this book were to go to American prisoners, fifteen thousand copies were sold in London alone in three weeks. Wharton was a Catholic priest, born in Maryland, but serving his Church in England during the Revolution.

THE EULOGY OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Great without pomp, without ambition brave,
 Proud not to conquer fellow-men, but save;
 Friend to the wretched, foe to none but those
 Who plan their greatness on their brethren's woes;
 5 Awed by no titles, faithless to no trust,
 Free without faction, obstinately just;
 Too rough for flattery, dreading e'en as death
 The baneful influence of corruption's breath;
 Warmed by Religion's sacred genuine ray
 10 That points to future bliss the unerring way:

 Such be my country!—what her sons should be,
 O, may they learn, great Washington, from thee!

HUGH HENRY BRACKENRIDGE.

(1748-1816.)

Hugh Henry Brackenridge, preacher, teacher, dramatist, soldier, lawyer, politician, judge, poet, and humorist, was born in Scotland, but came to America early in his boyhood. Amidst cruel hardships he secured enough education to become teacher of a country school in Maryland, and after pursuing this work for several years entered Princeton University, where he also taught for a while. He returned to Maryland and became both preacher and teacher.

While there he wrote for his pupils his first drama, The Battle of Bunker Hill (1776). In the spring of 1777 he became a chaplain in the Continental army, and during that same year wrote his second drama, The Death of General Montgomery. After the war he studied law and became judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. In 1796 he published his popular humorous work, Captain Farrago and Teague O'Regan, His Servant. His dramatic work has a surprisingly clear and lofty style.

WARREN'S* LAST WORDS.

By the last parting breath
 And blood of this your fellow-soldier slain,
 Be now adjured never to yield the right—
 The grand deposit of all-giving Heaven—
 5 To man's free nature, that he rules himself!

 Weep not for him who first espoused the cause,
 And risking life, hath met the enemy
 In fatal opposition—but rejoice!
 For now I go to mingle with the dead,—
 10 Great Brutus,* Hampden,* Sidney,* and the rest,
 Of old or modern memory, who lived
 A mound to tyrants, and strong hedge to kings,
 Bounding the inundation of their rage
 Against the happiness and peace of Man.

 15 I see three heroes where they walk serene,
 By crystal currents, on the vale of Heaven,
 High in full converse of immortal acts
 Achieved for truth and innocence on earth.

 Illustrious group! They beckon me along,
 20 To ray my visage with immortal light,

And bind the amaranth* around my brow.
 I come, I come, ye firstborn of true fame.
 Fight on, my countrymen, be free, be free!

FROM "THE DEATH OF GENERAL MONTGOMERY."*

Sad thought of cruelty and outrage dire!
 25 Not to be paralleled 'mongst human kind,
 Save in the tales of flesh-devouring men,
 The one-eyed Cyclops* and fierce Cannibal.
 For what we hear of Saracen* or Turk,
 Mogol* or Tartar* of Siberia,
 30 Is far behind the deed of infamy
 And horror mixed which Britons meditate.

.
 And at the Last Day, when the Pit receives
 Her gloomy brood, and seen among the rest,
 Some spirit distinguished by ampler swell
 35 Of malice, envy, and soul-gripping hate,
 Pointing to him, the foul and ugly ghosts
 Of hell shall say—"That was an Englishman."*

ST. GEORGE TUCKER.

(1752-1828.)

One of the most popular bits of early Southern verse was Resignation; or, Days of My Youth. Its author, St. George Tucker, was born in Bermuda, but early removed to Virginia. He became a brilliant jurist and was during several years Professor of Law at William and Mary College. Among his works are Fugitive Stanzas, Probationary Odes of Jonathan Pindar, Esq., Commentary on the Constitution, Disserta- tion on Slavery, and unpublished dramas. His poems possess much gracefulness and purity of sentiment.

DAYS OF MY YOUTH.

- Days of my youth,
Ye have glided away ;
Hairs of my youth,
Ye are frosted and gray ;
5 Eyes of my youth,
Your keen sight is no more ;
Cheeks of my youth,
Ye are furrowed all o'er ;
Strength of my youth,
10 All your vigor is gone ;
Thoughts of my youth,
Your gay visions are flown.
- Days of my youth,
I wish not your recall ;
15 Hairs of my youth,
I'm content ye should fall ;
Eyes of my youth,
You much evil have seen ;
Cheeks of my youth,
20 Bathed in tears have you been ;
Thoughts of my youth,
You have led me astray ;
Strength of my youth,
Why lament your decay ?
- 25 Days of my age,
Ye will shortly be past ;
Pains of my age,
Yet a while ye can last ;
Joys of my age,
30 In true wisdom delight ;

Eyes of my age,
 Be religion your light;
 Thoughts of my age,
 Dread ye not the cold sod;
³⁵ Hopes of my age,
 Be ye fixed on your God.

WILLIAM MUNFORD.

(1775-1825.)

During the last years of the Revolutionary period William Munford, a Virginian, worked steadily upon a blank verse translation of Homer's *Iliad and finished it just before his death. However, it did not appear in book form until 1846. Munford was a graduate of William and Mary, had been a State Senator for several years, and at the time of his death was clerk of the House of Delegates. His volume of original poems (1798) was considered but fair in quality in his own day, and they are not at all known now; but his translation of the Iliad is worthy of wider fame.

THE TRIUMPH OF HECTOR.*

With loud, tremendous shout,
 He called his Trojan heroes. Sons of Troy,*
 Equestrian warriors, to the onset come!
 Break now the Grecian wall, and on their ships
⁵ Throw flaming brands like thunderbolts of Jove!*

He said, inspiring fury; they his call
 With transport heard throughout that numerous host!

- Thronging together, to the wall they ran,
Armed with keen spears, before them held erect,
10 And mounting scaling ladders. Hector seized
And bore a stone which stood before the gates,
Heavy and craggy, pointed sharp at top,
Which not two men, though stoutest of the race
Earth now sustains, could without toil have moved 15 By levers from the ground and heaved its mass
Into a wagon; yet did singly he Toss it with ease, so light Saturnian Jove*
Made it to him! For, as a shepherd brings
In one hand joyfully a ram's rich fleece,
20 And feels but small the weight, so Hector bore
That rock enormous toward the lofty gates,
Strong-framed, with double valves, of panels thick,
Compact and firm; two iron bars within Transverse secured them, fastened by a bolt.
25 He near them took his stand, with legs astride,
That not in vain that weapon should be thrown;
Then smote them in the midst with all his strength,
And broke both hinges. Thundering on, the stone,
With force o'erwhelming, fell within the wall.
30 Loud rang the yielding gates, asunder riven,
Nor could the bars retain them; flew the planks
In splintered fragments, scattered every way.
Into the pass illustrious Hector leaped;
Gloomy as night, with aspect stern and dread!
35 Arrayed in brazen panoply, he shone
Terrific; in his hands two javelins keen!
And surely no one could have checked him then,
Except the gods, when through those gates he sprang!
His eyes, tremendous, flashed with living fire;
40 And, turning to his host, he called them all
To pass the barrier.

JOHN SHAW.

(1778-1809.)

In 1810 there appeared a little volume of verse, entitled simply Poems, and bearing the name Dr. John Shaw. The author had died a few months before. Born at Annapolis, Maryland, he studied at St. John's College in that city, and took courses in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania and at the University of Edinburgh. He went to Baltimore in 1805, and there was highly successful in his profession. His verse, while not approaching greatness, has much daintiness.

SONG.

Who has robbed the ocean cave,
 To tinge thy lips with coral hue?
 Who from India's distant wave
 For thee those pearly treasures drew?
 5 Who from yonder orient sky
 Stole the morning of thine eye?

Thousand charms thy form to deck,
 From sea, and earth, and air are torn;
 Roses bloom upon thy cheek,
 10 On thy breath their fragrance borne.
 Guard thy bosom from the day,
 Lest thy snows should melt away.*

But one charm remains behind,
 Which mute earth can ne'er impart;
 15 Nor in ocean wilt thou find,
 Nor in the circling air, a heart.
 Fairest, wouldst thou perfect be,
 Take, O take that heart from me!

WASHINGTON ALLSTON.

(1779-1843.)

Coleridge once said of Washington Allston: "He is surpassed by no man of his age in artistic and poetic genius." Allston was born at Georgetown, South Carolina, was educated at Harvard, and studied painting in England, France, and Italy. He became widely known as an artist, among his best productions being portraits of Benjamin West and Coleridge, and the pictures, "The Angel Uriel in the Sun" and "Belshazzar's Feast." He is best known to-day by his Lectures on Art, but some of his poems are noticeable for their vigorous expression.

IMMORTALITY.

To think for aye; to breathe immortal breath;
And know nor hope nor fear of ending death;
To see the myriad worlds that round us roll
Wax old and perish, while the steadfast soul
5 Stands fresh and moveless in her sphere of thought;
O God, omnipotent! Who in me wrought.
This conscious world, whose ever-growing orb,
When the dead Past shall all in time absorb,
Will be but as begun—O, of thine own,
10 Give of the holy light that veils thy throne,*
That darkness be not mine, to take my place,
Beyond the reach of light, a blot in space!
So may this wondrous Life, from sin made free,
Reflect thy love for aye, and to thy glory be.

ON THE LATE S. T. COLERIDGE.*

- 15 And thou art gone, most loved, most honored friend!
No, nevermore thy gentle voice* shall blend
With air of Earth its pure ideal tones,
Binding in one, as with harmonious zones,
The heart and intellect. And I no more
20 Shall with thee gaze on that unfathomed deep,
The Human Soul—as when, pushed off the shore,
Thy mystic bark would through the darkness sweep,
Itself the while so bright! For oft we seemed
As on some starless sea—all dark above,
25 All dark below—yet, onward as we drove,
To plough up light that ever round us streamed.
But he who mourns is not as one bereft
Of all he loved: thy living Truths are left.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY.

(1779-1843.)

It sometimes happens that one song gives a writer lasting fame. Among several examples may be mentioned Home, Sweet Home, The Old Oaken Bucket, Dixie, Hail Columbia, and The Star-Spangled Banner. The author of the last-named poem was born in Frederick County, Maryland, was educated at St. John's College, Annapolis, became a lawyer, and was for some time Attorney for the District of Columbia. During the second war with Great Britain he was sent on board a British ship to arrange an exchange of prisoners, and, the attack on Fort McHenry having begun, he was detained on board until the next morning. When, in the early morning light, he saw the American flag still waving above the fort, he seized an old envelope and wrote upon its back these stirring words. Other poems he wrote in after life; but only this one is widely known. But he who creates one lyric that a nation sings into its very soul has done indeed a most glorious life work.

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER.

O say, can you see, by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming—

Whose broad stripes and bright stars, through the clouds of the fight,

O'er the ramparts we watched were so gallantly streaming?

▪ And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air,

Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there;

O! say, does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

On that shore dimly seen through the mists of the deep,

¹⁰ Where the foe's haughty host in dread silence reposes,

What is that which the breeze, o'er the towering steep,

As it fitfully blows, now conceals, now discloses?
Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam,

In full glory reflected now shines on the stream;

15 'Tis the star-spangled banner ; O long may it wave O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave !

And where is that band who so vauntingly swore
 That the havoc of war and the battle's confusion
 A home and a country should leave us no more ?

20 Their blood has washed out their foul footstep's pollution.

No refuge could save the hireling and slave
 From the terror of flight, or the gloom of the grave ;

And the star-spangled banner[†] in triumph doth wave
 O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

25 O ! thus be it ever, when freemen shall stand Between their loved homes and the war's desolation !

Blessed with victory and peace, may the Heav'n-rescued land

Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation !

Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
 30 And this be our motto—"In God is our trust !"

And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave

O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

WILLIAM MAXWELL.

(1784-1857.)

William Maxwell, a lawyer, teacher, editor, and poet, was born at Norfolk, Virginia, was educated at Yale, became a member of the Virginia Legislature, and from 1838 to 1844 was President of Hampden-Sidney College. His poems, a volume of which appeared in 1810, have daintiness, but little depth—characteristics of a great portion of Southern poetry.

TO A FAIR LADY.

Fairest, mourn not for thy charms,
Circled by no lover's arms,
While inferior belles you see
Pick up husbands merrily.
5 Sparrows, when they choose to pair,
Meet their matches anywhere;
But the Phœnix,* sadly great,
Cannot find an equal mate.
Earth, tho' dark, enjoys the honor
10 Of a Moon to wait upon her;
Venus,* tho' divinely bright,
Cannot boast a satellite.

TO ANNE.

How many kisses do I ask?
Now you set me to my task.
15 First, sweet Anne, will you tell me
How many waves are in the sea?
How many stars are in the sky?
How many lovers you make sigh?
How many sands are on the shore?
20 I shall want just one kiss more.

RICHARD DABNEY.

(1787-1825.)

There was something of real genius in Richard Dabney. He had a genuinely poetic temperament. Born of a family very important in the intellectual development of Virginia, he himself became a teacher. In the burning of a Richmond theater he was so badly injured that the brilliant prospects of his life were practically ruined, and he became a slave to opium and liquor, and spent his last days rather equally between his schoolhouse and the tavern. His Poems Original and Translated appeared in 1812, and a larger edition was printed in 1815. His imitations of Euripides, Sappho, Seneca, Petrarch, and other classical writers are smooth and well expressed.

AN EPIGRAM* IMITATED FROM ARCHIAS.*

O wise was the people that deeply lamented
The hour that presented their children to light,
And gathering around, all the mis'ries recounted,
That brood o'er life's prospects and whelm them in night.

⁵ And wise was the people that deeply delighted,
When death snatched its victim from life's cheerless day;
For then, all the clouds, life's views that benighted,
They believed, at his touch, vanished quickly away.

Life, faithless and treach'rous, is forever presenting 10 To our view flying phantoms we never can gain;
Life, cruel and tasteless, is forever preventing
All our joys, and involving our pleasures in pain.

Death, kind and consoling, comes calmly and lightly,
The balm of all sorrow, the cure of all ill;
15 And after a pang, that but thrills o'er us slightly,
All then becomes tranquil, all then becomes still.

YOUTH AND AGE.

As numerous as the stars of heaven
Are the fond hopes to mortals given;
But two illumine, with brighter ray,
20 The morn and eve of life's short day.

Its glowing tints, on youth's fresh days,
The Lucifer* of life displays,
And bids its opening joys declare
Their bloom of prime shall be so fair,
25 That all its minutes, all its hours,
Shall breathe of pleasure's sweetest flowers.
But false the augury of that star—
The Lord of passion drives his car,
Swift up the middle line of heaven,
30 And blasts each flower that hope had given.
And care and woe, and pain and strife,
All mingle in the noon of life.

Its gentle beams, on man's last days,
The Hesperus* of life displays:
35 When all of passion's midday heat
Within the breast forgets to beat;
When calm and smooth our minutes glide,

Along life's tranquillizing tide ;
It points with slow, receding light,
⁴⁹ To the sweet rest of silent night ;
And tells, when life's vain schemes shall end,
Thus will its closing light descend,
And as the eve star seeks the wave,
Thus gently reach the quiet grave.

III.

THE PERIOD OF EXPANSION.

(1815-1850.)

GENERAL SURVEY.

In 1793 Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin—doubtless the most momentous event in the earlier history of the South. Strange as the fact may seem to-day, cotton was unknown as a staple crop previous to that date, and the raising of it inclined somewhat toward our modern idea of “fancy gardening.” But with the coming of this invention the whole economic and political system of the South was revolutionized. Farmers from the coast rapidly moved westward, carrying their slaves with them, and there sprang into existence a vast interior civilization. Virginia lost something of her old-time prestige; creative energy passed to no small extent into the lower South; and political domination transferred itself largely to the Cotton Belt. By 1815 we find such men in Congress as Crawford and Troup, of Georgia, and Henry Clay, of Kentucky. The South no longer consisted merely of Virginia and the Carolinas. Literature goes hand in hand with History. We now find the interior contributing to poetry; while not a few new characteristics and not a little new energy present themselves.

RICHARD HENRY WILDE.

(1789-1847.)

Richard Henry Wilde was born at Dublin, Ireland, and came to America when he was eight years of age. After a boyhood of heavy toil and hardship, he became a lawyer, served as Attorney-General of Georgia, was a member of the House of Representatives of that State, and at the age of twenty-five was chosen Congressman. Failing of reëlection in 1834, he went to Italy, became intensely interested in Italian literature, found and rescued the only reliable portrait of Dante, and wrote his large work, Conjectures and Researches Concerning the Love, Madness, and Imprisonment of Tasso. This and his poems are his most widely known writings.

STANZAS.

My life is like the summer rose,
That opens to the morning sky,
But, ere the shades of evening close,
Is scattered on the ground—to die!
5 Yet on the rose's humble bed
The sweetest dews of night are shed,
As if she wept the waste to see—
But none shall weep a tear for me!*

My life is like the autumn leaf
10 That trembles in the moon's pale ray:
Its hold is frail—its date is brief,
Restless—and soon to pass away!

Yet, ere that leaf shall fall and fade,
 The parent tree will mourn its shade,
 15 The winds bewail the leafless tree—
 But none shall breathe a sigh for me!

My life is like the prints which feet
 Have left on Tampa's desert strand;
 Soon as the rising tide shall beat,
 20 All trace will vanish from the sand;
 Yet, as if grieving to efface
 All vestige of the human race,
 On that lone shore loud moans the sea—
 But none, alas! shall mourn for me!

TO THE MOCKING BIRD.

25 Winged mimic of the woods! thou motley fool!
 Who shall thy gay buffoonery describe?
 Thine ever-ready notes of ridicule
 Pursue thy fellows still with jest and gibe.
 Wit, sophist, songster, Yorick* of thy tribe,
 30 Thou sportive satirist of Nature's school,
 To thee the palm of scoffing we ascribe.
 Arch-mocker and mad Abbot of Misrule!*
 For such thou art by day—but all night long
 Thou pourest a soft, sweet, pensive, solemn strain,
 35 As if thou didst in this thy moonlight song
 Like to the melancholy Jacques* complain,
 Musing on falsehood, folly, vice, and wrong,
 And sighing for thy motley coat again.

A FAREWELL TO AMERICA.*

Farewell, my more than fatherland!*
 40 Home of my heart and friends, adieu!
 Lingering beside some foreign strand,

How oft shall I remember you!
How often, o'er the waters blue,
Send back a sigh to those I leave,
45 The loving and beloved few,
Who grieve for me—for whom I grieve!

We part!—no matter how we part,
There are some thoughts we utter not,
Deep treasured in our inmost heart,
50 Never revealed, and ne'er forgot!
Why murmur at the common lot?
We part!—I speak not of the pain—
But when shall I each lovely spot
And each loved face behold again?

55 It must be months, it may be years,*
It may—but no!—I will not fill
Fond hearts with gloom, fond eyes with tears,
“Curious to shape uncertain ill.”
Though humble—few and far—yet, still 60 Those hearts and eyes are ever dear;
Theirs is the love no time can chill,
The truth no chance or change can sear!

All I have seen, and all I see,
Only endears them more and more;
65 Friends cool, hopes fade, and hours flee,
Affection lives when all is o'er!
Farewell, my more than native shore!
I do not seek or hope to find,
Roam where I will, what I deplore
70 To leave with them and thee behind!

MIRABEAU BONAPARTE LAMAR.

(1798-1859.)

Born and reared at Louisville, Georgia, Mirabeau Lamar was for some years engaged in business in that town. In 1835 he removed to Texas, served in the Mexican War, became attorney-general, secretary of war, vice president, and president of the Republic of Texas, and was appointed United States minister to Argentine Republic in 1857 and minister to Nicaragua and Costa Rica in 1858. In a literary way he should be remembered for a few lyrics, especially those dealing with fair women.

THE DAUGHTER OF MENDOZA.*

O lend to me, sweet nightingale,
Your music by the fountains!
And lend to me your cadences,
O river of the mountains!

⁵ That I may sing my gay brunette,
A diamond spark in coral set,
Gem for a prince's coronet—
The daughter of Mendoza.

How brilliant is the morning star!

¹⁰ The evening star how tender!
The light of both is in her eye,
Their softness and their splendor.
But for the lash that shades their light,
They are too dazzling for the sight;
¹⁵ And when she shuts them, all is night—
The daughter of Mendoza.

- O! ever bright and beauteous one,
 Bewildering and beguiling,
 The lute is in thy silvery tones,
 20 The rainbow in thy smiling.
 And thine is, too, o'er hill and dell,
 The bounding of the young gazelle,
 The arrow's flight and ocean's swell—
 Sweet daughter of Mendoza!
- 25 What though, perchance, we meet no more?
 What though too soon we sever?
 Thy form will float like emerald light
 Before my vision ever.
 For who can see and then forget
 30 The glories of my gay brunette?
 Thou art too bright a star to set—
 Sweet daughter of Mendoza!

EDWARD COATE PINKNEY.

(1802-1828.)

A brief, unhappy life was that of Pinkney. Born in London, where his father was stationed as minister to the Court of St. James, he spent the first eight years of his life in England, then came to America and entered St. Mary's College, Baltimore, became a midshipman in the United States navy, began the study of law in 1822, was admitted to the bar in 1824, and became professor of belles-lettres in the University of Maryland in 1826. He was then considered one of the "five greatest poets of the country;" but, as poets of rank were somewhat scarce at that time, this was not necessarily a compliment. However, he did possess something of the fervor and finish of true genius. His one volume, Poems, appeared in 1825.

A HEALTH.*

- I fill this cup to one made up
 Of loveliness alone,
 A woman of her gentle sex
 The seeming paragon;
 5 To whom the better elements
 And kindly stars have given
 A form so fair that, like the air,
 'Tis less of earth than heaven.
- Her every tone is music's own,
 10 Like those of morning birds,
 And something more than melody
 Dwells ever in her words;
 The coinage of her heart are they,
 And from her lips each flows
 15 As one may see the burdened bee
 Forth issue from the rose.
- Affections are as thoughts to her,
 The measures of her hours;
 Her feelings have the fragrancy,
 20 The freshness of young flowers;
 And lovely passions, changing oft,
 So fill her she appears
 The image of themselves by turns—
 The idol of past years!
- 25 Of her bright face one glance will trace
 A picture on the brain,
 And of her voice in echoing hearts
 A sound must long remain;

But memory, such as mine of her,
 30 So very much endears,
 When death is nigh my latest sigh
 Will not be life's, but hers.

I fill this cup to one made up
 Of loveliness alone,
 35 A woman of her gentle sex
 The seeming paragon—
 Her health! and would on earth there stood
 Some more of such a frame,
 That life might be all poetry.
 40 And weariness a name.

VOTIVE SONG.

I burn no incense, hang no wreath,
 On this thine early tomb!
 Such cannot cheer the place of death,
 But only mock its gloom.
 45 Here odorous smoke and breathing flower
 No grateful influence shed;
 They lose their perfume and their power,
 When offered to the dead.

And if, as is the Afghaun's* creed,
 50 The spirit may return,
 A disembodied sense, to feed
 On fragrance near its urn—
 It is enough that she, whom thou
 Didst love in living years,
 55 Sits desolate beside it now,
 And fall these heavy tears.

A SERENADE.*

- Look out upon the stars, my love,
And shame them with thine eyes,
On which, than on the lights above,
60 There hang more destinies.
Night's beauty is the harmony
Of blending shades and light!
Then, lady, up—look out, and be
A sister to the night!
- 65 Sleep not! thine image wakes for aye
Within my watching breast:
Sleep not! from her soft sleep should fly
Who robs all hearts of rest.
Nay, lady, from thy slumbers break,
70 And make this darkness gay,
With looks whose brightness well might make
Of darker nights a day.

GEORGE DENISON PRENTICE.

(1802-1870.)

George D. Prentice was born at Boston, Massachusetts, was educated at Brown University, and came to the South in 1830. He founded the Louisville Journal (afterwards the Courier-Journal) and became a leader in Southern political and literary affairs. His witty Prenticiana and his sympathetic Life of Henry Clay were once very popular books, and still have readers; but his poems, which are a little too declamatory to suit modern taste, are not widely known to-day. They were not collected until six years after his death.

LINES TO A LADY.¹

Lady, I've gazed on thee,
And thou art now a vision of the Past,
A spirit star, whose holy light is cast
On memory's voiceless sea.

5 That star—it lingers there
As beautiful as 'twere a dewy flower,
Soft wafted down from Eden's glorious bower,
And floating in mid-air.

It is that blessed one
10 The day star of my destiny—the first
I e'er could worship as the Persian erst
Worshiped his own loved sun.*

On all my years may lie
The shadow of the tempest, their dark flow
15 Be wild and drear, but that dear one will glow
Still beautiful on high.

THE CLOSING YEAR.*

'Tis midnight's holy hour—and silence now
Is brooding, like a gentle spirit, o'er
The still and pulseless world. Hark! on the winds 20 The bell's deep notes are swelling. 'Tis the knell
Of the departed year.

No funeral train

¹These selections are used with the permission of the publishers, Robert Clarke Company, Cincinnati.

Is sweeping past: yet on the stream and wood,
With melancholy light, the moonbeams rest,
25 Like a pale, spotless shroud; the air is stirred,
As by a mourner's sigh; and on yon cloud,
That floats so still and placidly through heaven,
The spirits of the seasons seem to stand—
Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn's solemn form,
30 And Winter, with his aged locks—and breathe
In mournful cadences, that come abroad
Like the far wind harp's wild and touching wail,
A melancholy dirge o'er the dead Year,
Gone from the earth forever.

35 'Tis a time
For memory and for tears. Within the deep,
Still chambers of the heart a specter dim,
Whose tones are like the wizard voice of Time,
Heard from the tomb of ages, points its cold
40 And solemn finger to the beautiful
And holy visions that have passed away
And left no shadow of their loveliness
On the dead waste of life. That specter lifts
The coffin lid of hope, and joy, and love,
45 And, bending mournfully above the pale,
Sweet forms that slumber there, scatters dead flowers
O'er what has passed to nothingness.

The year
Has gone, and, with it, many a glorious throng
50 Of happy dreams. Its mark is on each brow,
Its shadow on each heart. In its swift course
It waved its scepter o'er the beautiful,
And they are not. It laid its pallid hand
Upon the strong man, and the haughty form
55 Is fallen, and the flashing eye is dim.
It trod the hall of revelry, where thronged

The bright and joyous, and the tearful wail
 Of stricken ones is heard, where erst the song
 And reckless shout resounded. It passed o'er 60 The battle plain, where sword, and spear, and shield
 Flashed in the light of midday—and the strength
 Of serried hosts is shivered, and the grass,
 Green from the soil of carnage, waves above
 The crushed and moldering skeleton. It came 65 And faded like a wreath of mist at eve;
 Yet, ere it melted in the viewless air,
 It heralded its millions to their home
 In the dim land of dreams.

Remorseless Time!—

Fierce spirit of the glass and scythe!* what power
 70 Can stay him in his silent course, or melt
 His iron heart to pity? On, still on
 He presses and forever. The proud bird,
 The condor of the Andes, that can soar
 Through heaven's unfathomable depths, or brave
 75 The fury of the Northern hurricane
 And bathe his plumage in the thunder's home,
 Furls his broad wings at nightfall and sinks down
 To rest upon his mountain crag,—but Time
 Knows not the weight of sleep or weariness,
 80 And night's deep darkness has no chain to bind
 His rushing pinion. Revolutions sweep
 O'er earth, like troubled visions o'er the breast
 Of dreaming sorrow; cities rise and sink,
 Like bubbles on the water; fiery isles
 85 Spring, blazing, from the ocean, and go back
 To their mysterious caverns; mountains rear
 To heaven their bald and blackened cliffs, and bow
 Their tall heads to the plain; new empires rise,
 Gathering the strength of hoary centuries,
 90 And rush down like the Alpine avalanche,
 Startling the nations; and the very stars,

Yon bright and burning blazonry of God,
Glitter a while in their eternal depths,
And, like the Pleiad,* loveliest of their train,
⁹⁵ Shoot from their glorious spheres, and pass away,
To darkle in the trackless void; yet Time,
Time, the tomb builder, holds his fierce career,
Dark, stern, all pitiless, and pauses not,
Amid the mighty wrecks that strew his path,
¹⁰⁰ To sit and muse, like other conquerors,
Upon the fearful ruin he has wrought.

WILLIAM GILMORE SIMMS.

(1806-1870.)

In William Gilmore Simms we find one of the most versatile of Americans. He was a lawyer, a planter, a statesman, an editor, a novelist, a dramatist, a critic, a biographer, an historian, and a poet. He was born at Charleston, South Carolina, was early left an orphan, and, through unceasing endeavors, fought his way to success. A most prolific writer himself, he became a most enthusiastic patron of literature, and gathered around himself some of the most brilliant men of his day. No attempt could be made here to give a complete list of his works. Ten years before his death they numbered eighteen volumes of poetry and more than sixty volumes of history, criticism, and fiction. Perhaps he is known best to-day by two of his novels, The Yemassee (1835) and The Partisan (1835); but there are qualities in his poems that are worthy of modern-day attention and admiration.

THE GRAPEVINE SWING.*

Lithe and long as the serpent train,
 Springing and clinging from tree to tree,
 Now darting upward, now down again,
 With a twist and a twirl that are strange to see:
 5 Never took serpent a deadlier hold,
 Never the cougar a wilder spring,
 Strangling the oak with the boa's fold,
 Spanning the beech with the condor's wing.

Yet no foe that we fear to seek—
 10 The boy leaps wild to thy rude embrace;
 Thy bulging arms bear as soft a cheek
 As ever on lover's breast found place:
 On thy waving train is a playful hold
 Thou shalt never to lighter grasp persuade;
 15 While a maiden sits in thy drooping fold,
 And swings and sings in the noonday shade!

O! giant strange of our Southern woods,
 I dream of thee still in the well-known spot,
 Though our vessel strain o'er the ocean floods,
 20 And the Northern forest beholds thee not;
 I think of thee still with a sweet regret,
 As the cordage yields to my playful grasp—
 Dost thou spring and cling in our woodlands yet?
 Does the maiden still swing in thy giant clasp?

THE LOST PLEIAD.

25 Not in the sky,
 Where it was seen
 So long in eminence of light serene—
 Nor on the white tops of the glistening wave,
 Nor down, in mansions of the hidden deep,

30 Though beautiful in green
And crystal, its great caves of mystery—
Shall the bright watcher have
Her place and, as of old, high station keep!

Gone! gone!

35 Oh! nevermore, to cheer
The mariner, who holds his course alone
On the Atlantic, through the weary night,
When the stars turn to watchers, and do sleep,
Shall it again appear,
40 With the sweet-loving certainty of light.
Down shining on the shut eyes of the deep!

The upward-looking shepherd on the hills
Of Chaldea,* night returning, with his flocks,
He wonders why his beauty doth not blaze,
45 Gladding his gaze,—
And, from his dreary watch along the rocks,
Guiding him homeward o'er the perilous ways!
How stands he waiting still, in a sad maze,
Much wondering, while the drowsy silence fills 50 The sorrowful vault!—how lingers, in the hope that night
May yet renew the expected and sweet light,
So natural to his sight!

And lone,
Where, at the first, in smiling love she shone,
55 Brood the once happy circle of bright stars:
How should they dream, until her fate was known,
That they were ever confiscate to death?
That dark oblivion the pure beauty mars,
And, like the earth, its common bloom and breath,
60 That they should fall from high;
The lights grow blasted by a touch, and die,—
All their concerted springs of harmony
Snapped rudely, and the generous music gone!

- Ah! still the strain
 65 Of wailing sweetness fills the saddening sky;
 The sister stars, lamenting in their pain
 That one of the selectest ones must die,—
 Must vanish, when most lovely, from the rest!
 Alas! 'tis ever thus the destiny.
- 70 Even Rapture's song hath evermore a tone
 Of wailing, as for bliss too quickly gone.
 The hope most precious is the soonest lost,
 The flower most sweet is first to feel the frost.
 Are not all short-lived things the loveliest?
- 75 And, like the pale star, shooting down the sky,
 Look they not ever brightest, as they fly
 From the lone sphere they blest?

SONG IN MARCH.

- Now are the winds about us in their glee,
 Tossing the slender tree;
 80 Whirling the sands about his furious car,
 March cometh from afar;
 Breaks the sealed magic of old Winter's dreams,
 And rends his glossy streams;
 Chafing with potent airs, he fiercely takes 85 Their fetters from the lakes,
 And, with a power by queenly Spring supplied,
 Wakens the slumbering tide.
- With a wild love he seeks young Summer's charms
 And clasps her to his arms;
 90 Lifting his shield between, he drives away
 Old Winter from his prey;
 The ancient tyrant, whom he boldly braves,
 Goes howling to his caves;
 And, to his northern realm compelled to fly,
 95 Yields up the victory;
 Melted are all his bands, overthrown his towers,
 And March comes bringing flowers.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

(1809-1849.)

In all literary history there is scarcely a record of a life more filled with trials, discouragement, and sorrow than that of Edgar Allan Poe. His grandfather, General David Poe, was a famous Revolutionary hero; his father had deserted the practice of law to join a company of players at Charleston, South Carolina; and his mother was a beautiful actress who was a member of this troupe. He was born while the company was playing in Boston. Two years later his father was lying dead in Richmond, Virginia, and the mother soon followed. Edgar was adopted by John Allan, a very wealthy merchant of that city, and by much petting and indulgence in amusing but doubtful customs, such as drinking repeatedly to company's health, was given a most promising start toward future troubles and final ruin. At the age of six he was taken to England and attended school there for five years.

In 1826 he entered the University of Virginia, immediately gained notice in the study of languages, began to drink and gamble, contracted heavy debts, was taken from the institution, entered a counting-house of Mr. Allan's, ran away, and went to Boston. There he published a volume of verse (1827) and, under an assumed name, entered the regular army. In 1829 Mr. Allan had him entered at West Point; but, through willful neglect of duty, he was discharged in 1831. Another volume of verse appeared soon afterwards. In 1833 he won a prize of one hundred dollars offered by The Baltimore Saturday Visitor for the best short story—his Manuscript Found in a Bottle. He secured a place on the Southern Literary Messenger of Baltimore, in 1835, was made editor, married his cousin, Virginia Clemm, during the next year, and soon lost his position on the Messenger, possibly through drinking and neglect of duty. One year in New York, six in Philadelphia, back to New York, South again, and then death in a dreadful form—such is the closing history of his career.

In Philadelphia he became editor of The Gentleman's Magazine and later of Graham's Magazine. It was at this time that he was writing some of his greatest stories and such poetry as The Raven (1844). In 1845 he gained both business and editorial control of The Broadway Journal, New York; but this soon failed. His beloved wife, who had ever been an inspiration and help to him, died amidst heartrending poverty, in 1847. Poe, now a mere wreck, wandered back to Baltimore, and is said to have been drugged, taken to the polls to be voted, and then left half dead upon the streets. He died Sunday, October 7, 1849. "He was great in his genius, unhappy in his life, wretched in his death; but in his fame he is immortal."

In technical and artistic phases Poe's poetry is scarcely equaled by that of any other American poet. His theory of verse was that words were instruments or means for producing music, and sometimes he made meaning subordinate to sound. He taught no philosophy and was neither moral nor immoral; he was simply unmoral. But in the higher harmony of beautifully mingling words he was a master. He believed that a song was worth while simply as a song. Swinburne has said of our country: "Once as yet, and once only, has there sounded out of it all one pure note of original song worth singing and echoed from the singing of no other man; a note of song neither wide nor deep, but utterly true, rich, clear, and native to the singer; the short exquisite music, subtle and simple and somber and sweet, of Edgar Poe."

ISRAFEL.

"And the angel Israfel, whose heartstrings are a lute, and who has the sweetest voice of all God's creatures."—Koran.

In Heaven a spirit doth dwell
 Whose heartstrings are a lute;
 None sing so wildly well
 As the angel Israfel,
 5 And the giddy* stars (so legends tell),
 Ceasing their hymns, attend the spell
 Of his voice, all mute.

Tottering above
 In her highest noon,
 10 The enamored moon
 Blushes with love,
 While, to listen, the red levin*
 (With the rapid Pleiads, even,
 Which were seven)
 15 Pauses in Heaven.

And they say (the starry choir
 And the other listening things)

- That Israfeli's fire
Is owing to that lyre
20 By which he sits and sings,—
The trembling living wire
Of those unusual strings.
- But the skies that angel trod,
Where deep thoughts are a duty,
25 Where Love's a grown-up God,
Where the Houri* glances are Imbued with all the beauty
Which we worship in a star.
- Therefore thou art not wrong,
30 Israfeli, who despisest
An unimpassioned song;
To thee the laurels belong,
Best bard, because the wisest:
Merrily live, and long!
- 35 The ecstasies above
With thy burning measures suit:
Thy grief, thy joy, thy hate, thy love,
With the fervor of thy lute;
Well may the stars be mute!
- 40 Yes, Heaven is thine; but this
Is a world of sweets and sour;
Our flowers are merely—flowers,
And the shadow of thy perfect bliss
Is the sunshine of ours.
- 45 If I could dwell
Where Israfel
Hath dwelt, and he where I,
He might not sing so wildly well
A mortal melody,
50 While a bolder note than this might swell
From my lyre within the sky.*

THE BELLS.*

Hear the sledges with the bells,
Silver bells!
What a world of merriment their melody foretells!
55 How they tinkle, tinkle, tinkle,
In the icy air of night!
While the stars, that oversprinkle
All the heavens, seem to twinkle
With a crystalline delight;
60 Keeping time, time, time,
In a sort of Runic rhyme,*
To the tintinnabulation that so musically wells
From the bells, bells, bells, bells,
Bells, bells, bells—
65 From the jingling and the tinkling of the bells.

Hear the mellow wedding bells,
Golden bells!
What a world of happiness their harmony foretells!
Through the balmy air of night
70 How they ring out their delight!
From the molten-golden notes,
And all in tune.
What a liquid ditty floats
To the turtle dove that listens, while she gloats
75 On the moon!
O, from out the sounding cells,
What a gush of euphony voluminously wells!
How it swells!
How it dwells
80 On the Future! How it tells
Of the rapture that impels
To the swinging and the ringing
Of the bells, bells, bells,

Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 85 Bells, bells, bells—
 To the rhyming and the chiming of the bells!

Hear the loud alarum bells,
 Brazen bells!
 What a tale of terror, now, their turbulency tells!
 90 In the startled ear of night
 How they scream out their affright!
 Too much horrified to speak,
 They can only shriek, shriek,
 Out of tune,
 95 In a clamorous appealing to the mercy of the fire,
 In a mad expostulation with the deaf and frantic fire,
 Leaping higher, higher, higher,
 With a desperate desire,
 And a resolute endeavor
 100 Now—now to sit, or never,
 By the side of the palefaced moon.
 O, the bells, bells, bells!
 What a tale their terror tells Of Despair!
 105 How they clang, and clash, and roar!
 What a horror they outpour
 On the bosom of the palpitating air!
 Yet the ear it fully knows
 By the twanging
 110 And the clanging,
 How the danger ebbs and flows;
 Yet the ear distinctly tells,
 In the jangling
 And the wrangling,
 115 How the danger sinks and swells,—
 By the sinking or the swelling in the anger of the bells,
 Of the bells,

Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells—
120 In the clamor and the clangor of the bells!

Hear the tolling of the bells,
 Iron bells!
What a world of solemn thought their monody compels!
In the silence of the night
125 How we shiver with affright
At the melancholy menace of their tone!
For every sound that floats
From the rust within their throats
 Is a groan.
130 And the people—ah, the people,
They that dwell up in the steeple,
 All alone,
 And who tolling, tolling, tolling,
In that muffled monotone,
135 Feel a glory in so rolling
On the human heart a stone—
They are neither man nor woman,
They are neither brute nor human,
 They are Ghouls!
140 And their king it is who tolls;
And he rolls, rolls, rolls,
 Rolls
A pæan from the bells;
And his merry bosom swells
145 With the pæan of the bells,
And he dances, and he yells:
 Keeping time, time, time,
 In a sort of Runic rhyme,
To the pæan of the bells,
150 Of the bells:
 Keeping time, time, time,
 In a sort of Runic rhyme,

To the throbbing of the bells,
 Of the bells, bells, bells—
 155 To the sobbing of the bells;
 Keeping time, time, time,
 As he knells, knells, knells,
 In a happy Runic rhyme,
 To the rolling of the bells,
 160 Of the bells, bells, bells:
 To the tolling of the bells,
 Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells—
 To the moaning and the groaning of the bells.

ANNABEL LEE.*

165 It was many and many a year ago,
 In a kingdom by the sea,
 That a maiden there lived whom you may know
 By the name of Annabel Lee;
 And this maiden she lived with no other thought
 170 Than to love and be loved by me.

I was a child and she was a child,
 In this kingdom by the sea;
 But we loved with a love that was more than love,
 I and my Annabel Lee;
 175 With a love that the wingèd seraphs of heaven
 Coveted her and me.

And this was the reason that, long ago,
 In this kingdom by the sea,
 A wind blew out of a cloud, chilling
 180 My beautiful Annabel Lee;
 So that her highborn kinsmen came
 And bore her away from me,
 To shut her up in a sepulcher
 In this kingdom by the sea.

¹⁸⁵ The angels, not half so happy in heaven,
Went envying her and me;
Yes! that was the reason (as all men know,
In this kingdom by the sea)
That the wind came out of the cloud by night,
¹⁹⁰ Chilling and killing my Annabel Lee.

But our love it was stronger by far than the love
Of those who were older than we,
Of many far wiser than we;
And neither the angels in heaven above,
¹⁹⁵ Nor the demons down under the sea,
Can ever dissever my soul from the soul
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee:

For the moon never beams, without bringing me dreams
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee;
²⁰⁰ And the stars never rise, but I feel the bright eyes
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee;
And so, all the night-tide, I lie down* by the side
Of my darling—my darling—my life and my bride,
In her sepulcher there by the sea,
²⁰⁵ In her tomb by the sounding sea.

THE RAVEN.*

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary,
Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore,—
While I nodded, nearly napping, suddenly there came a tapping,
As of some one gently rapping, rapping at my chamber door.

210 " 'Tis some visitor," I muttered, "tapping at my chamber door:
 Only this and nothing more."

Ah, distinctly I remember it was in the bleak December,
 And each separate dying ember wrought its ghost upon the floor.
 Eagerly I wished the morrow;—vainly I had sought to borrow

215 From my books surcease of sorrow—sorrow for the lost Lenore,
 For the rare and radiant maiden whom the angels
 name Lenore:
 Nameless here for evermore.

And the silken, sad, uncertain rustling of each purple curtain
 Thrilled me—filled me with fantastic terrors never felt before;

220 So that now, to still the beating of my heart, I stood repeating:
 " 'Tis some visitor entreating entrance at my chamber door,
 Some late visitor entreating entrance at my chamber door:
 This it is and nothing more."

Presently my soul grew stronger; hesitating then no longer,

225 "Sir," said I, "or Madam, truly your forgiveness I
 implore;
 But the fact is I was napping, and so gently you came rapping,
 And so faintly you came tapping, tapping at my
 chamber door,

That I scarce was sure I heard you"—here I opened wide the door :—
 Darkness there and nothing more.

²³⁰ Deep into that darkness peering, long I stood there wondering, fearing,
 Doubting, dreaming dreams no mortals ever dared to dream before ;
 But the silence was unbroken, and the stillness gave no token,
 And the only word there spoken was the whispered
 word, "Lenore?"
 This I whispered, and an echo murmured back the word, "Lenore :"
²³⁵ Merely this and nothing more.

Back into the chamber turning, all my soul within me burning,
 Soon again I heard a tapping somewhat louder than before.
 "Surely," said I, "surely that is something at my window lattice ;
 Let me see, then, what thereat is, and this mystery explore ;
²⁴⁰ Let my heart be still a moment and this mystery explore :
 'Tis the wind and nothing more."

Open here I flung the shutter, when, with many a flirt and flutter,*
 In there stepped a stately Raven* of the saintly days of yore.
 Not the least obeisance made he ; not a minute stopped or stayed he ;
²⁴⁵ But, with mien of lord or lady, perched above my
 chamber door,

Perched upon a bust of Pallas* just above my chamber door:

Perched, and sat, and nothing more.

Then this ebony bird beguiling my sad fancy into smiling

By the grave and stern decorum of the countenance it wore,—

²⁵⁰“Though thy crest be shorn and shaven, thou,” I said, “art sure no craven,

Ghastly grim and ancient Raven wandering from the Nightly shore:

Tell me what thy lordly name is on the Night’s Plutonian* shore:”

Quoth the Raven, “Nevermore.”

Much I marveled this ungainly fowl to hear discourse so plainly,

²⁵⁵Though his answer little meaning—little relevancy
bore;

For we cannot help agreeing that no living human being

Ever yet was blessed with seeing bird above his chamber door,

Bird or beast upon the sculptured bust above his
chamber door,

With such name as “Nevermore.”

²⁶⁰But the Raven, sitting lonely on the placid bust, spoke only

That one word, as if his soul in that one word he did outpour.

Nothing further then he uttered, not a feather then he fluttered,

Till I scarcely more than muttered, “Other friends have flown before:

On the morrow he will leave me, as my Hopes have flown before."

265

Then the bird said, "Nevermore."

Startled at the stillness broken by reply so aptly spoken,

"Doubtless," said I, "what it utters is its only stock and store,

Caught from some unhappy master whom unmerciful Disaster

Followed fast and followed faster till his songs one burden bore :

²⁷⁰Till the dirges of his Hope that melancholy burden
 bore

Of 'Never—nevermore.'

But the Raven still beguiling all my fancy into smiling,

Straight I wheeled a cushioned seat in front of bird and bust and door ;

Then, upon the velvet sinking, I betook myself to linking

²⁷⁵Fancy unto fancy, thinking what this ominous bird of yore,

What this grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt, and ominous bird of yore

Meant in croaking "Nevermore."

Thus I sat engaged in guessing, but no syllable expressing

To the fowl whose fiery eyes now burned into my bosom's core ;

²⁸⁰This and more I sat divining, with my head at ease reclining

On the cushion's velvet lining that the lamplight gloated o'er,

But whose velvet violet lining with the lamplight gloating o'er
 She shall press, ah, nevermore!

Then, methought, the air grew denser, perfumed from an unseen censer 285 Swung by seraphim whose footfalls tinkled on the tufted floor.
"Wretch," I cried, "thy God hath lent thee—by these angels he hath sent thee
Respite—respite and nepenthe* from thy memories of Lenore;
Quaff, oh quaff this kind nepenthe, and forget this lost Lenore!"
 Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

290 "Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil! prophet still, if bird or devil!
Whether Tempter sent, or whether tempest tossed thee here ashore,
Desolate yet all undaunted, on this desert land enchanted—
On this home by Horror haunted—tell me truly, I
 implore:
Is there—is there balm in Gilead?*—tell me—tell me, I implore!"
295 Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil! prophet still, if bird or devil!
By that Heaven that bends above us, by that God
 we both adore,
Tell this soul with sorrow laden if, within the distant Aidenn,*
It shall clasp a sainted maiden whom the angels
 name Lenore:

³⁰⁰ Clasp a rare and radiant maiden whom the angels
name Lenore!"

Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

"Be that word our sign of parting, bird or fiend!"
I shrieked, upstarting:

"Get thee back into the tempest and the Night's Plutonian shore!

Leave no black plume as a token of that lie thy soul hath spoken!

³⁰⁵ Leave my loneliness unbroken! quit the bust above my door!

Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!"

Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore."

And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting

On the pallid bust of Pallas just above my chamber door;

³¹⁰ And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming,

And the lamplight o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor:

And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor

Shall be lifted—nevermore!

TO ONE IN PARADISE.*

Thou wast that all to me, love,
³¹⁵ For which my soul did pine—
A green isle in the sea, love,
A fountain and a shrine,
All wreathed with fairy fruits and flowers,
And all the flowers were mine.

³²⁰ Ah, dream, too bright to last!
 Ah, starry Hope, that didst arise
 But to be overcast!
 A voice from out the Future cries,
 "On! on!"—but o'er the Past
³²⁵ (Dim gulf!) my spirit hovering lies
 Mute, motionless, aghast!

For, alas! alas! with me
 The light of Life is o'er!
 No more—no more—no more—
³³⁰ (Such language holds the solemn sea
 To the sands upon the shore)
 Shall bloom the thunder-blasted tree
 Or the stricken eagle soar!

And all my days are trances,
³³⁵ And all my nightly dreams
 Are where thy dark eye glances,
 And where thy footstep gleams—
 In what ethereal dances,
 By what eternal streams.

THE CONQUEROR WORM.*

³⁴⁰ Lo! 'tis a gala night
 Within the lonesome latter years.
 An angel throng, bewinged, bedight
 In veils, and drowned in tears,
 Sit in a theater* to see
³⁴⁵ A play* of hopes and fears,
 While the orchestra breathes fitfully
 The music of the spheres.

Mimes,* in the form of God on high,
 Mutter and mumble low,

³⁵⁰ And hither and thither fly ;
 Mere puppets they, who come and go
 At bidding of vast formless things
 That shift the scenery to and fro,
 Flapping from out their condor wings
³⁵⁵ Invisible woe.

That motley drama—oh, be sure
 It shall not be forgot !
 With its Phantom* chased for evermore
 By a crowd that seize it not,
³⁶⁰ Through a circle that ever returneth in
 To the selfsame spot ;
 And much of Madness, and more of Sin,
 And Horror the soul of the plot.

But see amid the mimic rout
³⁶⁵ A crawling shape intrude :
 A blood-red thing that writhes from out
 The scenic solitude !
 It writhes—it writhes !—with mortal pangs
 The mimes become its food,
³⁷⁰ And seraphs sob at vermin fangs
 In human gore imbued.

Out—out are the lights—out all !
 And over each quivering form
 The curtain, a funeral pall,
³⁷⁵ Comes down with the rush of a storm,
 While the angels, all pallid and wan,
 Uprising, unveiling, affirm
 That the play is the tragedy, "Man,"
 And its hero, the Conqueror Worm.

ALBERT PIKE.

(1809-1891.)

Albert Pike was born at Boston, attended Harvard for a short time, taught school in New England, and in 1831 made an extensive tour of the West. In 1833 he settled at Fort Smith, Arkansas, and there taught school, edited the Arkansas Advocate, and studied law. He served through the war with Mexico, and was a brigadier general in charge of Indian troops in the Confederate army. In 1866 he removed to Memphis, Tennessee, and there edited the Appeal, and in 1868 took up the practice of law at Washington, D. C. Besides writing many works on Freemasonry, he was the author of four volumes of verse, the most famous, perhaps, being his Hymns to the Gods, contributed to Blackwood's Magazine.

TO THE MOCKING BIRD.

Thou glorious mocker of the world! I hear
 Thy many voices ringing through the glooms
 Of these green solitudes; and all the clear,
 Bright joyance of their song enthalls the ear,
 5 And floods the heart. Over the spherèd tomb
 Of vanished nations rolls thy music tide;
 No light from History's starlit page illumes
 The memory of these nations; they have died:
 None care for them but thou; and thou mayst sing
 10 O'er me, perhaps, as now thy clear notes ring
 Over their bones by whom thou once wast deified.

Glad scorner of all cities!* Thou dost leave
The world's mad turmoil and incessant din,
Where none in other's honesty believe,
15 Where the old sigh, the young turn gray and grieve,
Where misery gnaws the maiden's heart within:
Thou fleest far into the dark green woods,
Where, with thy flood of music, thou canst win
Their heart to harmony, and where intrudes 20 No discord on thy melodies. O, where,
Among the sweet musicians of the air,
Is one so dear as thou to these old solitudes?

Ha! what a burst was that! The Æolian* strain
Goes floating through the tangled passages
25 Of the still woods, and now it comes again,
A multitudinous melody,—like a rain
Of glassy music under echoing trees,
Close by a ringing lake. It wraps the soul
With a bright harmony of happiness,
30 Even as a gem is wrapped when round it roll
Thin waves of crimson flame; till we become,
With the excess of perfect pleasure, dumb,
And pant like a swift runner clinging to the goal.

I cannot love* the man who doth not love,
35 As men love light, the song of happy birds;
For the first visions that my boy heart wove
To fill its sleep with, were that I did rove
Through the fresh woods, what time the snowy herds
Of morning clouds shrunk from the advancing sun
40 Into the depths of Heaven's blue heart, as words
From the Poet's lips float gently, one by one,
And vanish in the human heart; and then
I reveled in such songs, and sorrowed when,
With noon-heat overwrought, the music-gush was done.

- ⁴⁵ I would, sweet bird, that I might live with thee,
 Amid the eloquent grandeur of these shades,
 Alone with nature—but it may not be;
 I have to struggle with the stormy sea
 Of human life until existence fades
⁵⁰ Into death's darkness. Thou wilt sing and soar Through the thick woods and shadow-checked glades,
 While pain and sorrow cast no dimness o'er
 The brilliance of thy heart; but I must wear,
 As now, my garments of regret and care,
⁵⁵ As penitents of old their galling sackcloth wore.

Yet why complain? What though fond hopes deferred

Have overshadowed Life's green paths with gloom?

- Content's soft music is not all unheard;
 There is a voice sweeter than thine, sweet bird,
⁶⁰ To welcome me within my humble home;
 There is an eye, with love's devotion bright,
 The darkness of existence to illumine.
 Then why complain? When Death shall cast his blight
 Over the spirit, my cold bones shall rest
⁶⁵ Beneath these trees; and from thy swelling breast,
 Over them pour thy song, like a rich flood of light.

TO SPRING.

- O thou delicious Spring!
 Nursed in the lap of thin and subtle showers,
 Which fall from clouds that lift their snowy wing
⁷⁰ From odorous beds of light-enfolded flowers,
 And from enmassèd bowers,
 That over grassy walks their greenness fling,
 Come, gentle Spring!

Thou lover of young wind,
75 That cometh from the invisible upper sea
 Beneath the sky, which clouds, its white foam, bind,
And, settling in the trees deliciously,
 Makes young leaves dance with glee,
 Even in the teeth of that old, sober hind,
80 Winter unkind.

Come to us; for thou art
Like the fine love of children, gentle Spring!
 Touching the sacred feeling of the heart,
 Or like a virgin's pleasant welcoming;
85 And thou dost ever bring
 A tide of gentle but resistless art
 Upon the heart.

Red Autumn* from the South
Contends with thee; alas! what may he show?
90 What are his purple-stained and rosy mouth.
And browned cheeks, to thy soft feet of snow,
 And timid, pleasant glow,
 Giving earth-piercing flowers their primal growth,
 And greenest youth?

95 Gay Summer conquers thee;
And yet he has no beauty such as thine;
 What is his ever-streaming, fiery sea,
 To the pure glory that with thee doth shine?
 Thou season most divine,
100 What may his dull and lifeless minstrelsy
 Compare with thee?

Come, sit upon the hills,
And bid the waking streams leap down their side.
 And green the vales with their slight sounding rills;

105 And when the stars upon the sky shall glide,
 And crescent Dian* ride,
 I too will breathe of thy delicious thrills,
 On grassy hills.

Alas! bright Spring, not long
 110 Shall I enjoy thy pleasant influence;
 For thou shalt die the summer heat among,
 Sublimed to vapour in his fire intense,
 And, gone forever hence,
 Exist no more: no more to earth belong,
 115 Except in song.

So I who sing shall die:
 Worn unto death, perchance, by care and sorrow;
 And, fainting thus with an unconscious sigh.
 Bid unto this poor body a good-morrow,
 120 Which now sometimes I borrow,
 And breathe of joyance keener and more high,
 Ceasing to sigh!

EVERY YEAR.

Life is a count of losses,
 Every year;
 125 For the weak are heavier crosses,
 Every year;
 Lost Springs with sobs replying
 Unto weary Autumns' sighing,
 While those we love are dying,
 130 Every year.

The days have less of gladness,
 Every year;
 The nights more weight of sadness,
 Every year;

135 Fair Springs no longer charm us,
The winds and weather harm us,
The threats of Death alarm us,
Every year.

There come new cares and sorrows,
140 Every year ;
Dark days and darker morrows,
Every year ;
The ghosts of dead loves haunt us,
The ghosts of changed friends taunt us,
145 And disappointments daunt us,
Every year.

To the Past go more dead faces,
Every year ;
As the loved leave vacant places,
150 Every year ;
Everywhere the sad eyes meet us,
In the evening's dusk they greet us,
And to come to them entreat us,
Every year.

155 "You are growing old," they tell us,
"Every year."
"You are more alone," they tell us,
"Every year ;
You can win no new affection,
160 You have only recollection,
Deeper sorrow and dejection,
Every year."

Too true!—Life's shores are shifting,
Every year ;
165 And we are seaward drifting,
Every year ;

Old places, changing, fret us,
 The living more forget us,
 There are fewer to regret us,
 170 Every year.

But the truer life draws nigher,
 Every year;
 And its Morning Star climbs higher,
 Every year;
 175 Earth's hold on us grows slighter,
 And the heavy burthen lighter,
 And the Dawn Immortal brighter,
 Every year.

ALEXANDER BEAUFORT MEEK.

(1814-1865.)

Alexander Meek was born at Columbia, South Carolina, but early removed to Tuscaloosa, Alabama. He was educated at the University of Alabama and at the University of Georgia, and became a lawyer in 1835. He served as editor of various Southern papers, held several political positions, and was in 1845 Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. His verse appeared in two volumes, Red Eagle (1855) and Songs and Poems of the South (1857).

LAND OF THE SOUTH.

I.

Land of the South!—imperial land!—
 How proud thy mountains rise!
 How sweet thy scenes on every hand!
 How fair thy covering skies!

- ⁵ But not for this—oh, not for these—
I love thy fields to roam;
Thou hast a dearer spell to me,—
Thou art my native home!

II.

- The rivers roll their liquid wealth,
¹⁰ Unequaled to the sea;
Thy hills and valleys bloom with health,
And green with verdure be!
But not for thy proud ocean streams,
Not for thine azure dome,
¹⁵ Sweet, sunny South, I cling to thee,—
Thou art my native home!

III.

- I've stood beneath Italia's clime,
Beloved of tale and song,
On Helvyn's* hills, proud and sublime.
²⁰ Where nature's wonders throng;
By Tempe's* classic sunlit streams,
Where Gods, of old, did roam.—
But ne'er have found so fair a land
As thou, my native home!

IV.

- ²⁵ And thou hast prouder glories, too,
Than nature ever gave;
Peace sheds o'er thee her genial dew,
And Freedom's pinions wave;
Fair Science flings her pearls around,
³⁰ Religion lifts her dome,—
These, these endear thee to my heart,
My own, loved native home!

V.

And "Heaven's best gift to man"* is thine—
 God bless thy rosy girls!
 35 Like sylvan flowers they sweetly shine,
 Their hearts are pure as pearls!
 And grace and goodness circle them,
 Where'er their footsteps roam;
 How can I then, whilst loving them,
 40 Not love my native home?

VI.

Land of the South!—imperial land!—
 Then here's a health to thee:
 Long as thy mountain barriers stand,
 May'st thou be blest and free!
 45 May dark dissension's banner ne'er
 Wave o'er thy fertile loam!
 But should it come, there's one will die
 To save his native home!

THE MOCKING BIRD.

From the vale, what music ringing,
 50 Fills the bosom of the night;
 On the sense, entrancèd, flinging
 Spells of witchery and delight!
 O'er magnolia, lime, and cedar,
 From yon locust top it swells,
 55 Like the chant of serenader,
 Or the rhymes of silver bells!
 Listen! dearest, listen to it!
 Sweeter sounds were never heard!
 'Tis the song of that wild poet—
 60 Mime and minstrel—Mocking Bird.

- See him, swinging in his glory,
On yon topmost bending limb!
Caroling his amorous story,
Like some wild crusader's hymn!
- 65 Now it faints in tones delicious
As the first low vow of love!
Now it bursts in swells capricious,
All the moonlit vale above!
Listen! dearest, etc.
- 70 Why is't thus, this sylvan Petrarch*
Pours all night his serenade?
'Tis for some proud woodland Laura,
His sad sonnets all are made!
But he changes now his measure—
- 75 Gladness bubbling from his mouth—
Jest, and gibe, and mimic pleasure—
Winged Anacreon* of the South!
Listen! dearest, etc.
- Bird of music,* wit, and gladness,
80 Troubadour of sunny climes,
Disenchanter of all sadness,
Would thine art were in my rhymes!
O'er the heart that's beating by me
I would weave a spell divine;
- 85 Is there aught she could deny me
Drinking in such strains as thine?
Listen! dearest, etc.

PHILIP PENDLETON COOKE.

(1816-1850.)

Philip Pendleton Cooke was supposed to be a lawyer; but his avocations—hunting and writing—left little time for his vocation. Born at Martinsburg, Virginia, he was educated at Princeton, studied law, and opened an office—where he was seldom seen. His verse appeared frequently in the Knickerbocker Magazine, The Gentleman's Magazine, and the Southern Literary Messenger. His one collection, Froissart Ballads and Other Poems, appeared in 1847, but does not by any means contain all of his efforts. Rosa Lee and To My Daughter Lily were among his most widely known lines; but Florence Vane was by far the most popular.

FLORENCE VANE.*

I loved thee long and dearly,
 Florence Vane;
 My life's bright dream and early
 Hath come again;
 6 I renew in my fond vision
 My heart's dear pain,
 My hope, and thy derision,
 Florence Vane!

The ruin, lone and hoary,
 10 The ruin old,
 Where thou didst hark my story,
 At even told,—

That spot—the hues Elysian*
Of sky and plain—
15 I treasure in my vision,
Florence Vane.

Thou wast lovelier than the roses
In their prime;
Thy voice excelled the closes
20 Of sweetest rhyme;
Thy heart was as a river
Without a main.*
Would I had loved thee never,
Florence Vane!

25 But, fairest, coldest wonder '
Thy glorious clay
Lieth the green sod under—
Alas the day!
And it boots not to remember
30 Thy disdain—
To quicken love's pale ember,
Florence Vane!

The lilies of the valley
By young graves weep,
35 The daisies love to dally
Where maidens sleep:
May their bloom, in beauty vying,
Never wane
Where thine earthly part is lying,
40 Florence Vane!

SEVERN TEACKLE WALLIS.

(1816-1894.)

Severn Teackle Wallis was a man active in many walks of life. Born at Baltimore, he was educated at St. Mary's College in that city, and became known as one of the most successful lawyers and reformers in the South. In 1847 he visited Spain and wrote his Glimpses of Spain, and two years later was appointed by the United States to go back and examine the titles of East Florida lands. He became Provost of the University of Maryland in 1870. His poetry has much carefulness, nicety in the use of words, and beauty of sentiment. His most popular poems in former days were The Last of the Hours, God's Acres, Truth and Reason, and The Blessed Hand.

THE BLESSED HAND.*

- For you and me, who love the light
 Of God's uncloistered day,
 It were indeed a dreary lot
 To shut ourselves away
 5 From every glad and sunny thing
 And pleasant sight and sound,
 And pass from out a silent cell
 Into the silent ground.
- 10 Not so the good monk. Anselm, thought,
 For, in his cloister's shade,
 The cheerful faith that lit his heart
 Its own sweet sunshine made;

And in its glow he prayed and wrote,
From matin song* till even,
15 And trusted, in the Book of Life,
To read his name in heaven.

What holy books his gentle art
Filled full of saintly lore!
What pages, brightened by his hand,
20 The splendid missals* bore!
What blossoms, almost fragrant, twined
Around each blessed name,
And how his Saviour's cross and crown
Shone out from cloud and flame!

25 But unto clerk as unto clown
One summons comes, alway,
And Brother Anselm heard the call
At vesper chime,* one day.
His busy pen was in his hand,
30 His parchment by his side—
He bent him o'er the half-writ prayer,
Kissed Jesu's name, and died!

They laid him where a window's blaze
Flashed o'er the graven stone,
35 And seemed to touch his simple name
With pencil like his own;
And there he slept, and, one by one,
His brethren died the while,
And trooping years went by and trod
40 His name from off the aisle.

And lifting up the pavement then,
An Abbot's couch to spread,
They let the jeweled sunshine in Where once lay Anselm's head.

⁴⁵ No crumbling bone was there, no trace
Of human dust that told;
But, all alone, a warm right hand
Lay, fresh, upon the mold.

It was not stiff, as dead men's are,
⁵⁰ But, with a tender clasp,
It seemed to hold an unseen hand
Within its living grasp;
And ere the trembling monks could turn
To hide their dazzled eyes,
⁵⁵ It rose, as with a sound of wings,
Right up into the skies!

O loving, open hands that give,
Soft hands, the tear that dry,
O patient hands that toil to bless—
⁶⁰ How can ye ever die!
Ten thousand vows from yearning hearts
To heaven's own gates shall soar,
And bear you up, as Anselm's hand
Those unseen angels bore!

⁶⁵ Kind hands! O never near to you
May come the woes ye heal!
O never may the hearts ye guard,
The griefs ye comfort, feel!
May He in whose sweet name ye build
⁷⁰ So crown the work ye rear
That ye may never claspèd be
In one unanswered prayer!

AMELIA WELBY.

(1819-1852.)

Amelia Welby is a poet who has deserved much more fame than is now hers. She was born at St. Michael's, Maryland; but after 1834 she lived at Louisville, Kentucky, where she married a prosperous merchant, George B. Welby. About 1837 some remarkably sweet and dainty bits of verse began to appear under the simple name "Amelia," and the appearance of her first volume, Poems by Amelia, was greeted by a large number of readers. The promise of her early work was not fulfilled; for she died in her thirty-third year.

TWILIGHT AT SEA.

The twilight hours like birds flew by,
 As lightly and as free;
 Ten thousand stars were in the sky,
 Ten thousand on the sea;
 5 For every wave, with dimpled face,
 That leaped upon the air,
 Had caught a star in its embrace
 And held it trembling there.*

TO A SEA SHELL.

Shell of the bright sea waves,
 10 What is it that we hear in thy sad moan?*

Is this unceasing music all thine own,
 Lute of the ocean caves?

'Tis vain—thou answerest not!
 Thou hast no voice to whisper of the dead;
 15 'Tis ours alone, with sighs like odors shed,
 To hold them unforgot.

THEODORE O'HARA.

(1820-1867.)

Again we come to a poet made famous by one song. In walking through some of our great national cemeteries, who has not been struck by the appropriateness of the poetry engraved upon the tablets? Probably lines from The Bivouac of the Dead are now more familiar than verses from any other American poem. The author was born at Danville, Kentucky, entered the United States army in 1846, served through the Mexican War, and was a colonel in the Confederate army. His only famous poem was written in memory of the Kentucky soldiers who died at the battle of Buena Vista.

THE BIVOUAC OF THE DEAD.

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
 • The soldier's last tattoo;
 No more on life's parade shall meet
 That brave and fallen few.
 5 On Fame's eternal camping-ground
 Their silent tents are spread,
 And Glory guards, with solemn round,
 The bivouac of the dead.

No rumor of the foe's advance
 10 Now swells upon the wind;
 No troubled thought at midnight haunts
 Of loved ones left behind;
 No vision of the morrow's strife
 The warrior's dream alarms;
 15 No braying horn nor screaming fife
 At dawn shall call to arms.

Their shivered swords are red with rust,
 Their plumèd heads are bowed;
 Their haughty banner, trailed in dust,
 20 Is now their martial shroud.
 And plenteous funeral tears have washed
 The red stains from each brow,
 And the proud forms, by battle gashed,
 Are free from anguish now.

25 The neighing troop, the flashing blade,
 The bugle's stirring blast,
 The charge, the dreadful cannonade,
 The din and shout, are past;
 Nor war's wild note nor glory's peal
 30 Shall thrill with fierce delight
 Those breasts that never more may feel
 The rapture of the fight.

Like the fierce northern hurricane
 That sweeps this great plateau,
 35 Flushed with triumph yet to gain,
 Came down the serried foe.*
 Who heard the thunder of the fray
 Break o'er the field beneath
 Knew well the watchword of that day
 Was "Victory or death."

40 Long had the doubtful conflict raged*
 O'er all that stricken plain,

For never fiercer fight had waged
The vengeful blood of Spain;
45 And still the storm of battle blew,
Still swelled the gory tide;
Not long, our stout old chieftain* knew,
Such odds his strength could bide.

'Twas in that hour his stern command
50 Called to a martyr's grave
The flower of his beloved band
The nation's flag to save.
By rivers of their fathers' gore
His firstborn laurels grew,
55 And well he deemed the sons would pour
Their lives for glory too.

Full many a norther's breath has swept O'er Angostura's* plain—
And long the pitying sky has wept
60 Above its moldering slain.
The raven's scream, or eagle's flight,
Or shepherd's pensive lay,
Alone awakes each sullen height
That frowned o'er that dread fray.

65 Sons of the Dark and Bloody Ground,*
Ye must not slumber there,
Where stranger steps and tongues resound
Along the heedless air.
Your own proud land's heroic soil
70 Shall be your fitter grave;
She claims from War his richest spoil—
The ashes of her brave.

Thus 'neath their parent turf they rest,
Far from the gory field;
75 Borne to a Spartan mother's breast*
On many a bloody shield;

The sunlight of their native sky
Smiles sadly on them here,
And kindred eyes and hearts watch by 80 The heroes' sepulcher.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead,
Dear as the blood ye gave;
No impious footstep here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
85 Nor shall your glory be forgot
While Fame her record keeps,
Or Honor points the hallowed spot
Where Valor proudly sleeps.

Yon marble minstrel's voiceless stone
90 In deathless song shall tell,
When many a vanished age hath flown,
The story how ye fell;
Nor wreck, nor change, nor winter's blight,
Nor Time's remorseless doom,
95 Shall dim one ray of glory's light
That gilds your glorious tomb.

NO. 1000
ANNEXED

IV.

THE CIVIL WAR PERIOD.

(1850-1875.)

GENERAL SURVEY.

Here is a period that opened in anger and war and closed in sorrow and poverty. Scarcely in all history can so complete and so devastating a change be shown. The entire social, economic, and political system was destroyed for all time, and amid the ruins hope seemed forever lost. A vast horde of ignorant slaves were suddenly vested with the right of suffrage; once fertile fields were changed to deserted wildernesses; a great wealth had become a pitiable poverty; a section once powerful in the political history of the nation had almost lost the common right of self-government. Far more terrible was the fact that the young manhood of the nation had largely perished from the earth; and there remained but a wretched remnant of a once proud and cultured people to build upon the widespread ruins.

Yet from such environments there began to arise a new empire, stronger and nobler because of the intense suffering through which its founders had passed. Then, too, it was based more nearly upon the legal equality of men and the dignity of labor. It was all a time of untold hardships and bitter discouragements, but untiring efforts. The history can be traced in the literature of the period. At first we have the valiant call to arms, and at the last the no less valiant call to labor. In those days the poetry of the South reached its noblest heights. Such men as Timrod, Hayne, and Lanier, forgetting their own sufferings, used the God-given gift within them for the arousing, the encouragement, the inspiration of their disheartened countrymen. In the real emotions and real pain of the day the daintiness and artificiality of Southern poetry largely disappeared, and singers sang with naturalness and true effect. But let these singers tell their own story.

PLANTATION MELODIES.

Doubtless the most spontaneous outburst of song known to modern days is found in the plantation melodies of the American negro. Unfortunately—for our poetry at least—the United States sprang into existence a civilized, intelligent, prosaic nation, almost entirely devoid of the national body of folklore which every great European people considers a priceless treasure of antiquity. Of all the peoples composing this nation, the negro alone has created a species of lyric verse that all the world may recognize as a distinctly American production.

The black man is undoubtedly the best natural musician and orator among modern peoples. Song is to him the very soul of life; it is an ever-present companion; it is a helper in toil, a pastime in idleness, a comforter in the time of sorrow. How strange, how weird are his harmonies, so unmodern, so redolent of an age long past! Amid the throb of the roaring streets, down on the gray sweltering dock, and far away at the cabin door by the cotton field the same melodies are arising—the folk songs of a people united by their love of music. There is always present a note of sadness, although the actual words may have something of gayety. The “coon song,” invented by the white man, is not of the same class; nor are the beautiful lyrics, Swanee Ribber and Old Kentucky Home, native negro melodies. In their half-expressed thoughts, their minor keys, their swaying rhythm, and their unexpected endings, the plantation songs defy imitation.

MOURNER'S SONG.*

I am sinking,
 I am sinking,
 I am sinking
 Down in death!
 5 Lord, have mercy,
 Lord, have mercy,
 Lord, have mercy
 On my soul!

ROLL, JORDAN, ROLL.*

My bruddah sittin' on de tree of life,
 10 An' he hyeah when Jordan roll.

Roll, Jordan,
 Roll, Jordan.
 Roll, Jordan, roll.
 O, march de angel march.
 15 O my soul, rise in heaven, Lord,
 Fah to hyeah when Jordan roll!

Little chil'en, learn to feah de Lord,
 An' let youah days be long.*

Roll, Jordan, etc.

20 O let no false nah spiteful word
 Be found upon youah tongue.

Roll, Jordan, etc.

HEAVEN.

I ain't been thah,
 But I'se been tole
 25 (Histe de window, let de dove come in!)*
 The gates am pearl,
 The streets am gole
 (Histe de window, let de dove come in!).

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.*

O, de good ole chariot swing so low,
 30 I don't want to leave me behind.
 O, swing low, sweet chariot,
 Swing low, sweet chariot,
 I don't want to leave me behind.
 O, de good ole chariot will take us all home,
 35 I don't want to leave me behind.
 O, swing low, sweet chariot, etc.

THE DEAD.

I has a fathah ovah yondah,
 I has a fathah ovah yondah,
 I has a fathah ovah yondah,
 40 Way ovah in de promise lan'!
 By an' by I'll go to see him,
 By an' by I'll go to see him,
 By an' by I'll go to see him,
 Way ovah thah!

45 I has a mothah ovah yondah, etc.

I has a brothah ovah yondah, etc.

(Thus the song continues until all the numerous relatives are remembered.)

IN DE MORNIN'.

In de mornin',
 In de mornin',
 Chil'en? Yes, my Lord!
 50 Don't you hyeah de trumpet soun'?
 If I had a-died when I was young,
 I nevah would had de race fah to run,
 Don't you hyeah de trumpet soun'?

O, Sam and Petah was a-fishin' in de sea,
 55 And dey drop de net and follow my Lord.
 Don't you hyeah, etc.

Dah's a silvah spade* fah to dig my grave,
 An' a gol'en chain fah to let me down.
 Don't you hyeah de trumpet soun'?
 60 In de mornin',
 In de mornin',
 Chil'en? Yes, my Lord!
 Don't you hyeah de trumpet soun'?

SAVANNAH FREEMAN'S SONG.

Heave away! Heave away!
 65 I'd rathah court a yellow gal dan work
 Fah Henry Clay.
 Heave away! Heave away!
 Yellow gal, I want to go,
 I'd rather court a yellow gal, etc.
 70 Heave away!
 Yellow gal, I want to go.

LAY DIS BODY DOWN.*

I knows moon-rise, I knows star-rise,
 Lay dis body down;
 I walks in de moonlight, I walks in de starlight,
⁷⁵ Lay dis body down.
 I walks in de graveyard, I walks troo de graveyard,
 Lay dis body down.
 I goes to de judgment in de evenin' of de day,
 When I lays dis body down;
⁸⁰ An' my soul and youah soul will meet in de day
 When I lays dis body down.

STARS BEGIN TO FALL.

I t'ink I hyeah my brothah say,
 Call de nation great and small;
 I looks on de God's right han'
⁸⁵ When de stahs begin to fall.
 O, what a mournin', sistah—
 O, what a mournin', brothah—
 O, what a mournin',
 When de stahs begin to fall!

CIVIL WAR SONGS.

The number of songs—i. e., poems to be set to music—written especially to aid the Confederate cause is very small. Many songs, of course, were sung in camp; but they were, for the most part, old familiar tunes long heard about the fireside and in the field. Dixie was a favorite in every regiment; but as it was written by Daniel Emmett, of Ohio, and was sung on New York stages two years before it reached the South, it cannot be classified as a Southern production. The same may be said of Old Kentucky Home and Suzanne Ribber, written by Stephen Foster, a native of Pennsylvania. In the Union camp there were dozens of songs written especially for the war, songs of all characters from the stirring Battle Cry of Freedom to Julia Ward Howe's dignified hymn: "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord." But it must not be inferred that the Confederate army was absolutely destitute of songs; it simply lacked a plentiful supply of song written especially for the movement. Among the few were Pike's Southrons, Hear Your Country Call You, Randall's Maryland, My Maryland, and the ones given below, the authors of some of which are not known.

CALL ALL.

Whoop! the Doodles have broken loose,
 Roaring round like the very deuce!
 Lice of Egypt,* a hungry pack—
 After 'em, boys, and drive 'em back.

- ⁵ Bulldog, terrier, cur, and fice,
 Back to the beggarly land of ice;
 Worry 'em, bite 'em, scratch and tear
 Everybody and everywhere.

- Old Kentucky is caved from under,*
¹⁰ Tennessee is split asunder,*
 Alabama awaits attack,
 And Georgia bristles up her back.

Old John Brown is dead and gone!*
 Still his spirit* is marching on—
 15 Lantern-jawed, and legs, my boys,
 Long as an ape's from Illinois!*

Want a weapon? Gather a brick,*
 Club or cudgel, or stone or stick;
 Anything with a blade or butt,
 20 Anything that can cleave or cut.

Anything heavy, or hard, or keen!
 Any sort of slaying machine!
 Anything with a willing mind,
 And the steady arm of a man behind.

25 Want a weapon? Why, capture one!
 Every Doodle has got a gun,
 Belt, and bayonet, bright and new;
 Kill a Doodle, and capture two!

Shoulder to shoulder, son and sire!
 30 All, call all to the feast of fire!
 Mother and maiden, and child and slave,
 A common triumph or a single grave.

THE BONNIE BLUE FLAG.*

We are a band of brothers, and native to the soil,
 Fighting for the property we gained by honest toil;
 35 And when our rights were threatened, the cry rose near and far:

Hurrah for the bonnie Blue Flag that bears a single star!

Hurrah! hurrah! for the bonnie Blue Flag
 That bears a single star!

As long as the Union was faithful to her trust, 40 Like friends and like brothers, kind were we and just;
But now when Northern treachery attempts our rights to mar,
We hoist on high the bonnie Blue Flag that bears a single star.

First, gallant South Carolina nobly made the stand;
Then came Alabama, who took her by the hand;
45 Next, quickly Mississippi, Georgia, and Florida—
All raised the flag, the bonnie Blue Flag that bears
a single star.

Ye men of valor, gather round the banner of the right;
Texas and fair Louisiana join us in the fight.
Davis, our loved President, and Stephens, statesmen are;
50 Now rally round the bonnie Blue Flag that bears
a single star.

And here's to brave Virginia! the Old Dominion
State
With the young Confederacy at length has linked her fate.
Impelled by her example, now other States prepare
To hoist on high the bonnie Blue Flag that bears
a single star.

55 Then here's to our Confederacy! strong we are and brave,
Like patriots of old we'll fight, our heritage to save;
And rather than submit to shame, to die we would prefer;
So cheer for the bonnie Blue Flag that bears a single star.

Then cheer, boys, cheer, raise the joyous shout, ⁶⁰ For Arkansas and North Carolina now have both gone out;
 And let another rousing cheer for Tennessee be given,
 The single star of the bonnie Blue Flag has grown to be eleven!
 Hurrah! hurrah! for the bonnie Blue Flag
 That bears a single star.

THE SOLDIER BOY.*

⁶⁵ I give my soldier boy a blade
 In fair Damascus* fashioned well.
 Who first the glittering falchion swayed,
 Who first beneath its fury fell,
 I know not; but I hope to know
⁷⁰ That for no mean or hireling trade,
 To guard no feeling base or low,
 I give my soldier boy a blade.

Cool, calm, and clear, the lucid flood
 In which its tempering work was done;
⁷⁵ As calm, as cool, as clear of mood
 Be thou, whene'er it sees the sun;
 For country's claim, at honor's call,
 For outraged friend, insulted maid,
 At mercy's voice to bid it fall,
⁸⁰ I give my soldier boy a blade.

The eye which marked its peerless edge,*
 The hand that weighed its balanced poise,
 Anvil and pincers, forge and wedge,
 Are gone with all their flame and noise;
⁸⁵ And still the gleaming sword remains.
 So when in dust I low am laid,
 Remember by these heartfelt strains
 I give my soldier boy a blade.

MARGARET PRESTON.

(1820-1897.)

Margaret Preston was the daughter of Dr. Junkin, founder of Lafayette College, and was born at Philadelphia. When she was twenty-eight years old her father became president of Washington (afterwards Washington and Lee) College, and from that time forth she resided in Virginia. She married Colonel J. T. L. Preston, a professor in the Virginia Military Institute, at Lexington. Her first volume of poetry was the highly popular Beechenbrook: A Rhyme of the War, published in 1866. This was followed by several other volumes, among the most widely known being Old Songs and New (1870) and Colonial Ballads (1887). There are true poetic qualities in her work—simplicity, emotion, vividness, melody, and accurate choice of words. Her merit has not been recognized to the proper extent, for there are in her verse characteristics of exceptionally high order.

CALLING THE ANGELS IN.¹

We mean to do it. Some day, some day,
We mean to slacken this feverish rush
That is wearing our very souls away,
And grant to our hearts a hush

¹These selections are used with the permission of Dr. George J. Preston, Baltimore.

⁵ That is only enough to let them hear
The footsteps of angels drawing near.*

We mean to do it. Oh, never doubt,
When the burden of daytime broil is o'er,
We'll sit and muse while the stars come out,
¹⁰ As the patriarchs sat in the door
Of their tents with a heavenward-gazing eye,
To watch for angels passing by.

We've seen them afar at high noontide,
When fiercely the world's hot flashings beat;
¹⁵ Yet never have bidden them turn aside
To tarry in converse sweet;
Nor prayed them to hallow the cheer we spread,
To drink of our wine and break our bread.

We promise our hearts that when the stress
²⁰ Of the life work reaches the longed-for close,
When the weight that we groan with hinders less,
We'll welcome such calm repose
As banishes care's disturbing din,
And then—we'll call the angels in.

²⁵ The day that we dreamed of comes at length,
When, tired of every mocking guest,
And broken in spirit and shorn of strength,
We drop at the door of rest,
And wait and watch as the day wanes on—
³⁰ But the angels we meant to call are gone!

THE HERO OF THE COMMUNE.*

- "Garçon!* you—you
 Snared along with this cursed crew?
 (Only a child, and yet so bold, Scarcely as much as ten years old!)
 35 Do you hear? do you know
 Why the gendarmes put you there, in the row,
 You, with those Commune wretches tall,
 With your face to the wall?"
- "Know? To be sure I know! why not?
 40 We're here to be shot;
 And there, by the pillar, 's the very spot,
 Fighting for France, my father fell!
 Ah, well!
 That's just the way I would choose to fall,
 45 With my back to the wall!"
- "(Sacre!* Fair, open fight, I say,
 Is something right gallant in its way,
 And fine for warming the blood; but who Wants wolfish work like this to do?
 50 Bah! 'tis a butcher's business!) How?
 (The boy is beckoning to me now!
 I knew that his poor child's heart would fail,
 . . . Yet his cheek's not pale!)
 Quick! say your say, for don't you see,
 55 When the church clock yonder tolls out three,
 You're all to be shot?
 . . . What?
 'Excuse you one moment?' O, ho, ho!
 Do you think to fool a gendarme so?"
- 60 "But, sir, here's a watch that a friend one day
 (My father's friend), just over the way,

Lent me; and if you'll let me free—
 It still lacks seven minutes of three—
 I'll come, on the word of a soldier's son,
 65 Straight back into line, when my errand's done."

"Ha, ha! No doubt of it! Off! Begone!
 (Now, good Saint Denis,* speed him on!
 The work will be easier since he's saved;
 For I hardly see how I could have braved
 70 The ardor of that innocent eye,
 As he stood and heard,
 While I gave the word,
 Dooming him like a dog to die.)"

"In time! well, thanks, that my desire
 75 Was granted; and now, I am ready! Fire!
 One word!—that's all!
 You'll let me turn my back to the wall?"

"Parbleu!* Come out of the line, I say,
 Come out! (Who said that his name was Ney?*)
 80 Ha! France will hear of him yet one day!"

THE SHADE OF THE TREES.

(On the death of Stonewall Jackson, 1863, his last words being, "Let us pass over the river and rest under the shade of the trees.")

What are the thoughts that are stirring his breast?
 What is the mystical vision he sees?
 "Let us pass over the river and rest
 Under the shade of the trees."

85 Has he grown sick of his toils and his tasks?
 Sighs the worn spirit for respite or ease?

Is it a moment's cool halt that he asks
Under the shade of the trees?

Is it the gurgle of waters whose flow
90 Overtime has come to him borne on the breeze,
Memory listens to, lapsing so low,
Under the shade of the trees?

Nay—though the rasp of the flesh was so sore,
Faith, that had yearnings far keener than these,*
95 Saw the soft sheen of the Thitherward Shore,
Under the shade of the trees;—

Caught the high psalms of ecstatic delight,
Heard the harps harping like soundings of seas,
Watched earth's assoiled ones walking in white
100 Under the shade of the trees.

O, was it strange he should pine for release,
Touched to the soul with such transports as these,
He who so needed the balsam of peace,
Under the shade of the trees?

105 Yes, it was noblest for him—it was best
(Questioning naught of our Father's decrees)
There to pass over the river and rest
Under the shade of the trees!

A GRAVE IN HOLLYWOOD CEMETERY, RICHMOND.*

I read the marble-lettered name,
110 And half in bitterness I said:
"As Dante* from Ravenna came,
Our poet came from exile—dead."

And yet, had it been asked of him
Where he would rather lay his head,
¹¹⁵ This spot he would have chosen. Dim
The city's hum drifts o'er his grave,
And green above the hollies wave
Their jagged leaves, as when a boy,
On blissful summer afternoons,
¹²⁰ He came to sing the birds his runes
And tell the river of his joy.

Who dreams that in his wanderings wide,
By stern misfortunes tossed and driven,
His soul's electric strands were riven
¹²⁵ From home and country? Let betide
What might, what would, his boast, his pride,
Was in his stricken motherland,
That could but bless and bid him go,
Because no crust was in her hand
¹³⁰ To stay her children's need. We know
The mystic cable* sank too deep
For surface storm or stress to strain,
Or from his answering heart to keep
The spark from flashing back again!

¹³⁵ Think of the thousand mellow rhymes,*
The pure idyllic passion-flowers,
Wherewith, in far-gone, happier times,
He garlanded this South of ours.
Provençal-like,* he wandered long,
¹⁴⁰ And sang at many a stranger's board,
Yet 'twas Virginia's* name that poured
The tenderest pathos through his song.
We owe the Poet praise and tears,
Whose ringing ballad* sends the brave,
¹⁴⁵ Bold Stuart* riding down the years—
What have we given him? Just a grave!

THERE'LL COME A DAY.

There'll come a day when the supremest splendor
Of earth or sky or sea,
Whate'er their miracles, sublime or tender,
150 Will wake no joy in me.

There'll come a day when all the aspiration,
Now with such fervor fraught
As lifts to heights of breathless exaltation,
Will seem a thing of naught.

155 There'll come a day when riches, honor, glory,
Music and song and art,
Will look like puppets in a worn-out story,
Where each has played his part.

There'll come a day when human love, the sweetest
160 Gift that includes the whole
Of God's grand giving—sovereignest, completest—
Shall fail to fill my soul.

There'll come a day—I shall not care how passes
The cloud across my sight,
165 If only, lark-like, from earth's nested grasses,
I spring to meet its light.

FRANCIS ORRERY TICKNOR.

(1822-1874.)

Very little is known concerning Francis Ticknor. He was a quiet, hard-working country physician, whose productions were seen very frequently in Southern magazines of the war period; but his poems did not receive wide notice until they were collected in a well-edited volume (1879), with an introduction by Paul Hamilton Hayne. Ticknor was a native of Georgia, studied medicine in New York and Philadelphia, and practiced his profession near Columbus, Georgia. There is no small amount of earnestness and sincerity in all his work, and a real lyric quality that caused Hayne to say that he was "one of the truest and sweetest lyric poets this country has yet produced."

LITTLE GIFFEN.*

Out of the focal and foremost fire,
 Out of the hospital walls as dire,
 Smitten of grapeshot and gangrene,
 Eighteenth battle and he sixteen—

⁵ Specter such as you seldom see,
 Little Giffen of Tennessee.

"Take him and welcome," the surgeon said;
 "Not the doctor can help the dead!"

So we took him and brought him where ¹⁰ The balm was sweet in our summer air;
 And we laid him down on a wholesome bed;
 Utter Lazarus,* heel to head!

And we watched the war with abated breath,
 Skeleton boy against skeleton death!

¹⁵ Months of torture, how many such!
 Weary weeks of the stick and crutch,—
 And still a glint in the steel-blue eye
 Told of a spirit that wouldn't die,

And didn't! Nay! more! in death's despite ²⁰ The crippled skeleton learned to write—

“Dear Mother!” at first, of course, and then
 “Dear Captain!” inquiring about the men.
 Captain’s answer: “Of eighty and five,
 Giffen and I are left alive.”

- 25 “Johnston* pressed at the front,” they say;—
 Little Giffen was up and away!
 A tear, his first, as he bade good-by,
 Dimmed the glint of his steel-blue eye.
 “I’ll write, if spared!” There was news of fight,
 30 But none of Giffen—he did not write!

I sometimes fancy that were I King
 Of the courtly Knights of Arthur’s ring,*
 With the voice of the minstrel in mine ear
 And the tender legend that trembles here,
 35 I’d give the best on his bended knee—
 The whitest soul of my chivalry—
 For Little Giffen of Tennessee.

VIRGINIANS OF THE VALLEY.*

The knightliest of the knightly race
 That, since the days of old,
 40 Have kept the lamp of chivalry
 Alight in hearts of gold;
 The kindliest of the kindly band
 That, rarely hating ease,
 Yet rode with Raleigh* round the land,
 45 With Smith* around the seas.

Who climbed the blue embattled hills
 Against uncounted foes,
 And planted there, in valleys fair,
 The lily and the rose;

50 Whose fragrance lives in many lands,
Whose beauty stars the earth,
And lights the hearths of happy homes
With loveliness and worth!

We thought they slept!—the men who kept
65 The names of noble sires,
And slumbered while the darkness crept
Around their vigil fires!
But aye the Golden Horseshoe Knights*
Their Old Dominion keep,
60 Whose foes have found enchanted ground,
But not a knight asleep.

JOHN REUBEN THOMPSON.

(1823-1873.)

We hear little to-day of John Reuben Thompson, although during this period he was perhaps the best-known occasional poet in the South. Perhaps his poems were so timely in their own day that they do not fit these times. He was born at Richmond, Virginia, and was educated at the University of Virginia. In 1847 he became editor of the Southern Literary Messenger and held the position for twelve years. In 1863 he went to England, and during the years spent there was a frequent contributor to English magazines. He was for some time literary editor of the New York Evening Post. As a lecturer and critic he won considerable notice, while his poems were highly popular in their day.

MUSIC IN CAMP.*

Two armies covered hill and plain,
Where Rappahannock's* waters
Ran deeply crimsoned with the stain
Of battle's recent slaughters.

- ⁵ The summer clouds lay pitched like tents
In meads of heavenly azure;
And each dread gun of the elements
Slept in its embrasure.

- The breeze so softly blew it made
¹⁰ No forest leaf to quiver,
And the smoke of the random cannonade
Rolled slowly from the river.

- And now, where circling hills looked down
With cannon grimly planted,
¹⁵ O'er listless camp and silent town
The golden sunset slanted.

- When on the fervid air there came
A strain—now rich, now tender;
The music seemed itself aflame
²⁰ With day's departing splendor.

A Federal band, which, eve and morn,
Played measures brave and nimble,
Had just struck up, with flute and horn
And lively clash of cymbal.

- ²⁵ Down flocked the soldiers to the banks,
Till, margined by its pebbles,
One wooded shore was blue with "Yanks,"
And one was gray with "Rebels."

Then all was still, and then the band,
30 With movement light and tricky,
Made stream and forest, hill and strand,
Reverberate with "Dixie."

The conscious stream with burnished glow
Went proudly o'er its pebbles,
35 But thrilled throughout its deepest flow
With yelling of the Rebels.

Again a pause, and then again
The trumpets pealed sonorous,
And "Yankee Doodle" was the strain
40 To which the shore gave chorus.

The laughing ripple shoreward flew,
To kiss the shining pebbles ;
Loud shrieked the swarming Boys in Blue
Defiance to the Rebels.

45 And yet once more the bugle sang
Above the stormy riot ;
No shout upon the evening rang—
There reigned a holy quiet.

The sad, slow stream its noiseless flood
50 Poured o'er the glistening pebbles ;
All silent now the Yankees stood,
And silent stood the Rebels.

No unresponsive soul had heard
That plaintive note's appealing,
55 So deeply "Home, Sweet Home" had stirred
The hidden founts of feeling.

Or Blue, or Gray, the soldier sees,
As by the wand of fairy,

The cottage 'neath the live oak trees,
 60 The cabin by the prairie.

Or cold, or warm, his native skies
 Bend in their beauty o'er him;
 Seen through the tear mist in his eyes,
 His loved ones stand before him.

65 As fades the iris* after rain
 In April's tearful weather,
 The vision vanished, as the strain
 And daylight died together.

But memory, waked by music's art,
 70 Expressed in simplest numbers,
 Subdued the sternest Yankee's heart,
 Made light the Rebel's slumbers.

And fair the form of music shines,
 That bright celestial creature,
 75 Who still, 'mid war's embattled lines,
 Gave this one touch of Nature.*

THE BATTLE RAINBOW.*

The warm, weary day was departing—the smile
 Of the sunset gave token the tempest had ceased,
 And the lightning yet fitfully gleamed for a while 80 On the cloud that sank sullen and dark in the east.

There our army, awaiting the terrible fight
 Of the morrow, lay hopeful and watching and still,
 Where their tents all the region had sprinkled with white,
 From river to river, o'er meadow and hill.

85 While above them the fierce cannonade of the sky Blazed and burst from the vapors that muffled the sun,
 Their "counterfeit clamors" gave forth no reply,
 And slept till the battle the charge in each gun.

When lo, on the cloud, a miraculous thing!
 90 Broke in beauty the rainbow our host to enfold;
 The center o'erspread by its arch, and each wing
 Suffused with its azure and crimson and gold.

Blest omen of victory, symbol divine
 Of peace after tumult, repose after pain;
 95 How sweet and how glowing with promise the sign
 To eyes that should never behold it again!

For the fierce flame of war on the morrow flashed out,
 And its thunder peals filled all the tremulous air:
 Over slipp'ry intrenchment and reddened redoubt*
 100 Rang the wild cheer of triumph, the cry of despair.

Then a long week of glory and agony came—
 Of mute supplication and yearning and dread;
 When day unto day* gave the record of fame,
 And night unto night gave the list of its dead.

105 We had triumphed—the foe had fled back to his ships,
 His standard in rags and his legions a wreck—
 But alas! the stark faces and colorless lips
 Of our loved ones gave triumph's rejoicing a check.

Not yet, O not yet, as a sign of release,
 110 Had the Lord set in mercy his bow in the cloud;

Not yet had the Comforter whispered of peace
 To the hearts that around us lay bleeding and bowed.

But the promise was given—the beautiful arc,
 With its brilliant confusion of colors that spanned
 115 The sky on that exquisite eve, was the mark
 Of the Infinite Love overarching the land!

And that Love, shining richly and full as the day,
 Through the tear drops that moisten each martyr's proud pall,
 On the gloom of the past the bright bow shall display
 120 Of Freedom, Peace, Victory, bent over all.

JAMES MATHEWES LEGARÉ.

(1823-1859.)

Very little is known about the life of Legaré. He was born at Charleston, South Carolina, early became a contributor to magazines, patented several inventions, published in 1847 his Orta-Undis, and Other Poems, and died at Aiken, South Carolina.

AHAB MOHAMMED.

A peasant stood before a king and said,
 "My children starve; I come to thee for bread."
 On cushions soft and silken sat enthroned
 The king, and looked on him that prayed and moaned,
 5 Who cried again,—“For bread I come to thee.”
 For grief, like wine, the tongue will render free.

Then said the prince with simple truth, "Behold,
 I sit on cushions silken-soft; of gold
 And wrought with skill the vessels which they bring 10 To fitly grace the banquet of a king.
 But at my gate the Mede* triumphant beats,
 And die for food my people in the streets.
 Yet no good father hears his child complain
 And gives him stones for bread,* for alms disdain.
 15 Come, thou and I will sup together—come."
 The wondering courtiers saw—saw and were dumb!
 Then followed with their eyes where Ahab led With grace the humble guest, amazed, to share his bread.

Him half abashed the royal host withdrew
 20 Into a room, the curtained doorway through.
 Silent behind the folds of purple closed,
 In marble life the statues stood disposed;
 From the high ceiling, perfume breathing, hung
 Lamps rich, pomegranate-shaped, and golden-swung.
 25 Gorgeous the board with massive metal shone,
 Gorgeous with gems arose in front a throne:
 These through the Orient lattice saw the sun.
 If gold there was, of meat and bread was none
 Save one small loaf; this stretched his hand and took 30 Ahab Mohammed, prayed to God, and broke:
 One half his yearning nature bid him crave,
 The other gladly to his guest he gave.
 "I have no more to give," he cheerily said;
 "With thee I share my only loaf of bread."
 35 Humbly the stranger took the offered crumb,
 Yet ate not of it, standing meek and dumb;
 Then lifts his eyes—the wondering Ahab saw
 His rags fall from him as the snow in thaw.
 Resplendent, blue, those orbs upon him turned;
 40 All Ahab's soul within him throbbed and burned.

"Ahab Mohammed," spoke the vision then,
 "From this thou shalt be blessèd among men.
 Go forth—thy gates the Mede bewildered flees,
 And Allah thank thy people on their knees.
 45 He who gives somewhat does a worthy deed,
 Of him the recording angel shall take heed;
 But he that halves all that his house doth hold,
 His deeds are more to God, yea, more than finest gold."

TO A LILY.*

Go bow thy head in gentle spite,
 50 Thou lily white;
 For she who spies thee waving here,
 With thee in beauty can compare
 As day with night.

Soft are thy leaves and white: her arms
 55 Boast whiter charms.
 Thy stem prone bent with loveliness
 Of maiden grace possesseth less:
 Therein she charms.

Thou in thy lake dost see 60 Thyself: so she
 Beholds her image in her eyes
 Reflected. Thus did Venus* rise
 From out the sea.

Inconsolate, bloom not again,
 65 Thou rival vain
 Of her whose charms have thine outdone,
 Whose purity might spot the sun,
 And make thy leaf a stain.

JAMES BARRON HOPE.

(1827-1887.)

James Barron Hope was born at Norfolk, Virginia, and, after graduating at William and Mary College, practiced law. But it seems that he put more zeal into his literary efforts than into his legal ones. Having served through the Civil War, he became, like Lee, an educator, and for some years was superintendent of schools at Norfolk. He became known as a poet for occasions, among such being the hundredth anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis, the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of Jamestown, the dedication of the Washington monument at Richmond, and the laying of the corner-stone of the Lee monument at Richmond.

FROM "ARMS AND THE MAN."¹ The New England Group.*

At Plymouth Rock a handful of brave souls,
Full-armed in faith, erected home and shrine,
And flourished where the wild Atlantic rolls
Its pyramids of brine.

⁵ There rose a manly race austere and strong,
On whom no lessons of their day were lost,

¹These selections are used with the permission of Mrs. Janey Hope Marr

Earnest as some conventicle's deep song,
And keen as their own frost.

But that shrewd frost became a friend to those 10 Who fronted there the Ice King's bitter storm,
For see we not that underneath the snows
The growing wheat keeps warm?

Soft ease and silken opulence they spurned;
From sands of silver, and from emerald boughs
15 With golden ingots laden full, they turned Like Pilgrims under vows.

For them no tropic seas, no slumbrous calms,
No rich abundance generously unrolled:
In place of Cromwell's proffered flow'rs and palms*
20 They chose the long-drawn cold.

The more it blew, the more they faced the gale;
The more it snowed, the more they would not freeze;
And when crops failed on sterile hill and vale,
They went to reap the seas!*

25 Far North, through wild and stormy brine they ran,
With hands a-cold plucked Winter by the locks!
Masterful mastered great Leviathan*
And drove the foam as flocks!

Next in their order came the Middle Group,
30 Perchance less hardy, but as brave they grew,— Grew straight and tall, with not a bend or stoop—
Heart timber through and through!

Midway between the ardent heat and cold
They spread abroad, and by a homely spell,
35 The iron of their axes changed to gold*
As fast the forests fell!

Doing the things they found to do, we see
 That thus they drew a mighty empire's charts,
 And, working for the present, took in fee
 40 The future for their marts!

And there unchallenged may the boast be made,
 Although they do not hold his sacred dust,
 That Penn, the Founder, never once betrayed
 The simple Indian's trust!

45 To them the genius which linked Silver Lakes*
 With the blue Ocean and the outer World,
 And the fair banner, which their commerce shakes,
 Wise Clinton's hand unfurled.

The Southern Colonies.

Then sweeping down below Virginia's capes,
 50 From Chesapeake to where Savannah flows,
 We find the settlers laughing 'mid their grapes
 And ignorant of snows.

The fragrant uppock* and golden corn
 Spread far afield by river and lagoon,
 55 And all the months poured out from Plenty's Horn*
 Were opulent as June.

Yet they had tragedies all dark and fell!
 Lone Roanoke Island* rises on the view,
 And this Peninsula its tale could tell 60 Of Opecanough!*

But when the Ocean thunders on the shore,
 Its waves, though broken, overflow the beach;
 So here our Fathers on and onward bore
 With English laws and speech.

65 Kind skies above them, underfoot rich soils;
 Silence and savage at their presence fled;
 This Giant's Causeway, sacred through their toils,
 Resounded at their tread.

70 With ardent hearts and ever-open hands,
 Candid and honest, brave and proud they grew,
 Their lives and habits colored by fair hands
 As skies give waters hue.

The race in semi-feudal* state appears—
 Their knightly figures glow in tender mist,
 75 With ghostly pennons flung from ghostly spears
 And ghostly hawks on wrist.

By enterprise and high adventure stirred,
 From rude lunette and sentry-guarded croft
 They hawked at Empire, and, as they spurred,
 80 Fate's falcon soared aloft!

Fate's falcon soared aloft full strong and free,
 With blood on talons, plumage, beak, and breast!
 Her shadow like a storm-shade on the sea
 Far-sailing down the West!

85 Swift hoofs clang out behind that Falcon's flights—Hoofs shod with Golden Horse Shoes* catch the eye!
 And as they ring, we see the Forest Knights—
 The Cavaliers* ride by!

FROM "THE CHARGE AT BALAKLAVA."*

90 All that morning they had waited,
 As their frowning faces showed:
 Horses stamping, riders fretting,

And their teeth together setting,
 Not a single sword blade wetting,
 As the battle ebbed and flowed.

.
⁹⁵ Brightly gleam six hundred sabres,
 And the brazen trumpets ring;
 Steeds are gathered, spurs are driven,
 And the heavens wildly riven
 With a mad shout upward given,
¹⁰⁰ Scaring vultures on the wing.

.
 And to-night the moon shall shudder
 As she looks down on the moor
 Where the dead of hostile races
 Slumber, slaughtered in their places:
¹⁰⁵ All their rigid, ghastly faces
 Spattered hideously with gore.

THREE SUMMER STUDIES.

I.

The cock hath crowed. I hear the doors unbarred;
 Down to the moss-grown porch my way I take,
 And hear, beside the well within the yard,
¹¹⁰ Full many an ancient, quacking, splashing drake,
 And gabbling goose, and noisy brood hen—all
 Responding to yon strutting gobbler's call.

The dew is thick upon the velvet grass—
 The porch rails hold it in translucent drops,
¹¹⁵ And as the cattle from th' inclosure pass,
 Each one, alternate, slowly halts and crops
 The tall, green spears, with all their dewy load,
 Which grow beside the well-known pasture road.

- A lustrous polish is on all the leaves—
 120 The birds flit in and out with varied notes—
 The noisy swallows twitter 'neath the eaves—
 A partridge whistle through the garden floats,
 While yonder gaudy peacock harshly cries,
 As red and gold flush all the eastern skies.
- 125 Up comes the sun: through the dense leaves a spot
 Of splendid light drinks up the dew; the breeze
 Which late made leafy music dies; the day grows hot,
 And slumbrous sounds come from marauding
 bees;
 The burnished river like a sword blade shines.
 130 Save where 'tis shadowed by the solemn pines.

II.

- Over the farm is brooding silence now—
 No reaper's song, no raven's clangor harsh,
 No bleat of sheep, no distant low of cow,
 No croak of frogs within the spreading marsh,
 135 No bragging cock from littered farmyard crows—
 The scene is steeped in silence and repose.

- A trembling haze hangs over all the fields—
 The panting cattle in the river stand,
 Seeking the coolness which its wave scarce yields.
 140 It seems a Sabbath through the drowsy land:
 So hushed is all beneath the Summer's spell,
 I pause and listen for some faint church bell.

- The leaves are motionless, the song bird's mute—
 The very air seems somnolent and sick:
 145 The spreading branches with o'erripened fruit
 Show in the sunshine all their clusters thick,
 While now and then a mellow apple falls
 With a dull sound within the orchard's walls.

The sky has but one solitary cloud,
 150 Like a dark island in a sea of light;
 The parching furrows 'twixt the corn rows plowed
 Seem fairly dancing in my dazzled sight,
 While over yonder road a dusty haze
 Grows reddish purple in the sultry blaze.

III.

155 That solitary cloud grows dark and wide,
 While distant thunder rumbles in the air,
 A fitful ripple breaks the river's tide—
 The lazy cattle are no longer there,
 But homeward come in long procession slow,
 160 With many a bleat and many a plaintive low.

Darker and wider spreading o'er the west
 Advancing clouds, each in fantastic form,
 And mirrored turrets on the river's breast
 Tell in advance the coming of a storm—
 165 Closer and brighter glares the lightning's flash,
 And louder, nearer, sounds the thunder's crash.

The air of evening is intensely hot,
 The breeze feels heated as it fans my brows;
 Now sullen raindrops patter down like shot,
 170 Strike in the grass, or rattle 'mid the boughs.
 A sultry lull, and then a gust again,
 And now I see the thick-advancing rain.

It fairly hisses as it comes along,
 And where it strikes bounds up again in spray
 175 As if 'twere dancing to the fitful song
 Made by the trees, which twist themselves and sway
 In contest with the wind which rises fast
 Until the breeze becomes a furious blast.

And now the sudden, fitful storm has fled ;
180 The clouds lie piled up in the splendid west,
In massive shadow tipped with purplish red,
Crimson or gold. The scene is one of rest ;
And on the bosom of yon still lagoon
I see the crescent of the pallid moon.

SUNSET ON HAMPTON ROADS.*

185 Behind me purplish lines marked out the town ;
Before me stretched the noble Roadstead's tide :
And there I saw the Evening sun go down,
Casting a parting glory far and wide—
As King who for the cowl puts off his crown—
190 So went the sun, and left a wealth of light
Ere hidden by the cloister gates of Night.

Beholding this, my soul was stilled in prayer ;
I understood how all men, save the blind,
Might find religion in a scene so fair
195 And formulate a creed within the mind ;
See prophecies in clouds, fates in the air.
The skies flamed red, the murm'ring waves were hushed—
"The conscious water saw its God and blushed."

HENRY TIMROD.

(1829-1867.)

The South has contributed to the roll of those that have made American literature worthy at least four names: Poe, Timrod, Hayne, and Lanier. The story of the life of each one is full of privations, afflictions, and great sorrows; but Timrod's cup of existence was filled to the very brim with vain endeavors and disappointments. He was born at Charleston, South Carolina, of cultured, versatile, and influential parents, and was educated in private schools of Charleston and at the University of Georgia. He studied law, but did not practice it. For ten years he was a private tutor near his home city; but in his various literary efforts he was far more enthusiastic and successful.

He served during a part of the war as a field correspondent for a Charleston paper, and in 1864 became associate editor of the South Carolinian, published at Columbia. He married; a son was born to him; his paper prospered; he established a comfortable home. Within a year General Sherman's army had destroyed his printing office; his boy had died; and he found himself a destitute invalid. He sold his furniture to buy food and medicine. In 1867 some friends sent him to visit Paul Hamilton Hayne at Copse Hill, Georgia; but the trip gave him no permanent relief. He died shortly after his return to Columbia, in 1867.

Timrod was a most sincere lover of Nature, as may be seen in almost every one of his poems; and with this characteristic must be associated the beauty and depth of his thought. There is often a real originality in his point of view. His imagination was broad and rich, while the sufferings of his own life gave him a mingled gentleness and sadness. From a technical standpoint, too, Timrod's verse is of high excellence. Oftentimes there is an extraordinary energy of expression, especially in his war lyrics. He was something of a master in his use of melodious words, and he summoned to his assistance every possible means—imagery, figures of speech, archaic words, bold comparisons, rhyme, and assonance. Richard Henry Stoddard speaks of him as "the ablest poet the South has yet produced."

SONNET.¹*

Most men know love but as a part of life;
They hide it in some corner of the breast,
Even from themselves; and only when they rest
In the brief pauses of that daily strife,
5 Wherewith the world might else be not so rife,
They draw it forth (as one draws forth a toy
To soothe some ardent, kiss-exacting boy)
And hold it up to sister, child, or wife.

Ah me! why may not love and life be one?
10 Why walk we thus alone, when by our side
Love, like a visible God, might be our guide?
How would the marts grow noble! and the street,
Worn like a dungeon floor by weary feet,
Seem then a golden court-way of the Sun!

¹These selections are used with the special permission of B. F. Johnson Publishing Company, authorized publishers of Timrod's poems.

THE SUMMER BOWER.*

- 15 It is a place whither I have often gone
For peace, and found it, secret, hushed, and cool,
A beautiful recess in neighboring woods.
Trees of the soberest hues, thick-leaved and tall,
Arch it o'erhead and column it around,
- 20 Framing a covert, natural and wild,
Domelike and dim; though nowhere so inclosed
But that the gentlest breezes reach the spot
Unwearied and unweakened. Sound is here
A transient and unfrequent visitor;
- 25 Yet, if the day be calm, not often then,
Whilst the high pines in one another's arms
Sleep, you may sometimes with unstartled ear
Catch the far fall of voices—how remote
You know not, and you do not care to know.
- 30 The turf is soft and green, but not a flower
Lights the recess, save one, star-shaped and bright—
I do not know its name—which here and there
Gleams like a sapphire set in emerald.
A narrow opening in the branched roof,
- 35 A single one, is large enough to show,
With that half glimpse a dreamer loves so much,
The blue air and the blessing of the sky.
Thither I always bent my idle steps,
When griefs depressed or joys disturbed my heart,
- 40 And found the calm I looked for, or returned
Strong with the quiet rapture in my soul.
But one day,
One of those July days when winds have fled
One knows not whither, I, most sick in mind
- 45 With thoughts that shall be nameless—yet no doubt
Wrong, or at least unhealthful, since, though dark
With gloom and touched with discontent, they had
No adequate excuse nor cause nor end—

I, with these thoughts, and on this summer day,
50 Entered the accustomed haunt, and found for once
No medicinal virtue.

Not a leaf

Stirred with the whispering welcome which I sought,
But in a close and humid atmosphere
55 Every fair plant and implicated bough
Hung lax and lifeless. Something in the place,
Its utter stillness, the unusual heat,
And some more secret influence, I thought,
Weighed on the sense like sin. Above I saw,
60 Though not a cloud was visible in heaven,
The pallid sky looked through a glazed mist
Like a blue eye in death.

The change, perhaps,

Was natural enough; my jaundiced sight,
65 The weather, and the time explain it all:
Yet have I drawn a lesson from the spot,
And shrined it in these verses for my heart.
Thenceforth those tranquil precincts I have sought
Not less, and in all shades of various moods;
70 But always shun to desecrate the spot
By vain repinings, sickly sentiments,
Or inconclusive sorrows. Nature, though
Pure as she was in Eden when her breath
Kissed the white brow of Eve, doth not refuse,
75 In her own way and with a just reserve,
To sympathize with human suffering;
But for the pains, the fever, and the fret
Engendered of a weak, unquiet heart,
She hath no solace; and who seeks her when 80 These be the troubles over which he moans,
Reads in her unreplying lineaments
Rebukes that, to the guilty consciousness,
Strike like contempt.

CAROLINA.*

I.

The despot treads thy sacred sands,
85 Thy pines give shelter to his bands,
Thy sons stand by with idle hands,
Carolina!

He breathes at ease thy airs of balm,
He scorns the lances of thy palm;
90 O! who shall break thy craven calm,
Carolina!

Thy ancient fame is growing dim,
A spot is on thy garment's rim;
Give to the winds thy battle hymn,
95 Carolina!

II.

Call on thy children of the hill,*
Wake swamp and river, coast and rill,
Rouse all thy strength and all thy skill,
Carolina!

100 Cite wealth and science, trade and art,
Touch with thy fire the cautious mart,
And pour thee through the people's heart,
Carolina!

Till even the coward spurns his fears,
105 And all thy fields and fens and meres
Shall bristle like thy palm with spears,
Carolina!

III.

Hold up the glories of thy dead;
Say how thy elder children bled,
110 And point to Eutaw's battle-bed,*
Carolina!

Tell how the patriot's soul was tried,
 And what his dauntless breast defied;
 How Rutledge* ruled and Laurens* died,
 115 Carolina!
 Cry! till thy summons, heard at last,
 Shall fall like Marion's* bugle blast
 Reëchoed from the haunted Past,
 Carolina!

IV.

120 I hear a murmur as of waves
 That grope their way through sunless caves,
 Like bodies struggling in their graves,
 Carolina!
 And now it deepens; slow and grand
 125 It swells, as rolling to the land,
 An ocean broke upon thy strand,
 Carolina!
 Shout! let it reach the startled Huns!*
 And roar with all thy festal guns!
 130 It is the answer of thy sons,
 Carolina!

V.

They will not wait to hear thee call;
 From Sachem's Head* to Sumter's wall
 Resounds the voice of hut and hall,
 135 Carolina!
 No! thou hast not a stain, they say,
 Or none save what the battle day
 Shall wash in seas of blood away,
 Carolina!
 140 Thy skirts indeed the foe may part,
 Thy robe be pierced with sword and dart;
 They shall not touch thy noble heart,
 Carolina!

VI.

Ere thou shalt own the tyrant's thrall
145 Ten times ten thousand men must fall;
Thy corpse may hearken to his call,
Carolina!

When, by thy bier, in mournful throngs
The women chant thy mortal wrongs,
150 'Twill be their own funereal songs,
Carolina!

From thy dead breast by ruffians trod
No helpless child shall look to God;
All shall be safe beneath thy sod,
155 Carolina!

VII.

Girt with such wills to do and bear,
Assured in right and mailed in prayer,
Thou wilt not bow thee to despair,
Carolina!

160 Throw thy bold banner to the breeze!
Front with thy ranks the threatening seas
Like thine own proud armorial trees,
Carolina!

Fling down thy gauntlet to the Huns,
165 And roar the challenge from thy guns;
Then leave the future to thy sons,
Carolina!

THE COTTON BOLL.*

While I recline
At ease beneath
170 This immemorial pine,
Small sphere!
(By dusky fingers brought this morning here
And shown with boastful smiles),

I turn thy cloven sheath,
175 Through which the soft white fibers peer,
That, with their gossamer bands,
Unite, like love, the sea-divided lands,
And slowly, thread by thread,
Draw forth the folded strands,
180 Than which the trembling line,
By whose frail help yon startled spider fled
Down the tall spear grass from his swinging bed,
Is scarce more fine;
And as the tangled skein
185 Unravels in my hands,
Betwixt me and the noonday light,
A veil seems lifted, and for miles and miles
The landscape broadens on my sight,
As, in the little boll, there lurked a spell
190 Like that which, in the ocean shell,
With mystic sound,
Breaks down the narrow walls that hem us round,
And turns some city lane
Into the restless main,
195 With all his capes and isles!

Yonder bird,
Which floats, as if at rest,
In those blue tracts above the thunder, where
No vapors cloud the stainless air,
200 And never sound is heard,
Unless at such rare time
When, from the City of the Blest,
Rings down some golden chime,
Sees not from his high place
205 So vast a cirque* of summer space
As widens round me in one mighty field,
Which, rimmed by seas and sands,
Doth hail its earliest daylight in the beams
Of gray Atlantic dawns;
210 And, broad as realms made up of many lands,

- Is lost afar
Behind the crimson hills and purple lawns
Of sunset, among plains which roll their streams
Against the Evening Star!
- ²¹⁵ And lo!
To the remotest point of sight,
Although I gaze upon no waste of snow,
The endless field is white;
And the whole landscape glows,
- ²²⁰ For many a shining league away,
With such accumulated light
As Polar lands would flash beneath a tropic day!
Nor lack there (for the vision grows,
And the small charm within my hands—
- ²²⁵ More potent even than the fabled one,
Which oped whatever golden mystery
Lay hid in fairy wood or magic vale,
The curious ointment of the Arabian tale—
Beyond all mortal sense
- ²³⁰ Doth stretch my sight's horizon, and I see,
Beneath its simple influence,
As if with Uriel's crown,*
I stood in some great temple of the Sun,
And looked, as Uriel, down!
- ²³⁵ Nor lack there pastures rich and fields all green
With all the common gifts of God,
For temperate airs and torrid sheen
Weave Edens of the sod;
Through lands which look one sea of billowy gold
- ²⁴⁰ Broad rivers wind their devious way;
A hundred isles in their embraces fold
A hundred luminous bays;
And through yon purple haze
Vast mountains lift their plumèd peaks cloud-crowned;
- ²⁴⁵ And, save where up their sides the plowman creeps,
An unhewn forest girds them grandly round,
In whose dark shades a future navy sleeps!

- Ye stars, which, though unseen, yet with me gaze
Upon this loveliest fragment of the earth!
250 Thou Sun, that kindlest all thy gentlest rays
Above it, as to light a favorite hearth!
Ye Clouds, that in your temples in the west
See nothing brighter than its humblest flowers!
And you, ye Winds, that on the ocean's breast
255 Are kissed to coolness ere ye reach its bowers!
Bear witness with me in my song of praise,
And tell the world that, since the world began,
No fairer land hath fired a poet's lays,
Or given a home to man!
- 260 But these are charms already widely blown!
His be the meed whose pencil's trace
Hath touched our very swamps with grace,
And round whose tuneful way
All Southern laurels bloom;
265 The Poet of "The Woodlands,"* unto whom Alike are known
The flute's low breathing and the trumpet's tone,
And the soft west wind's sighs;
But who shall utter all the debt,
270 O land wherein all powers are met
That bind a people's heart,
The world doth owe thee at this day,
And which it never can repay,
Yet scarcely deigns to own!
- 275 Where sleeps the poet who shall fitly sing
The source wherefrom doth spring
That mighty commerce which, confined
To the mean channels of no selfish mart,
Goes out to every shore
280 Of this broad earth, and throngs the sea with ships
That bear no thunders; hushes hungry lips
In alien lands;
Joins with a delicate web remotest strands;
And gladdening rich and poor,

- 285 Doth gild Parisian domes,
Or feed the cottage smoke of English homes,
And only bounds its blessings by mankind?
In offices like these thy mission lies,
My Country! and it shall not end
- 290 As long as rain shall fall and Heaven bend
In blue above thee. Though thy foes be hard
And cruel as their weapons, it shall guard
Thy hearthstones as a bulwark; make thee great
In white and bloodless state;
- 295 And haply, as the years increase—
Still working through its humbler reach
With that large wisdom which the ages teach—
Revive the half-dead dream of universal peace!
As men who labor in that mine
- 300 Of Cornwall,* hollowed out beneath the bed
Of ocean, when a storm rolls overhead,
Hear the dull booming of the world of brine
Above them, and a mighty muffled roar
Of winds and waters, yet toil calmly on,
- 305 And split the rock, and pile the massive ore,
Or carve a niche or shape the archèd roof;
So I, as calmly, weave my woof
Of song, chanting the days to come,
Unsilenced, though the quiet summer air
- 310 Stirs with the bruit of battles, and each dawn
Wakes from its starry silence to the hum
Of many gathering armies. Still,
In that we sometimes hear,
Upon the Northern winds, the voice of woe
- 315 Not wholly drowned in triumph, though I know
The end must crown us, and a few brief years
Dry all our tears,
I may not sing too gladly. To thy will Resigned, O Lord! we cannot all forget
- 320 That there is much even Victory must regret.
And, therefore, not too long
From the great burthen of our country's wrong

Delay our just release!
And, if it may be, save
³²⁵These sacred fields of peace
From stain of patriot or of hostile blood!
O, help us, Lord! to roll the crimson flood
Back on its course, and while our banners wing
Northward, strike with us! till the Goth* shall cling ³³⁰To his own blasted altar stones, and crave
Mercy; and we shall grant it, and dictate
The lenient future of his fate
There, where some rotting ships and crumbling quays
Shall one day mark the Port which ruled the Western seas.*

PAUL HAMILTON HAYNE.

(1830-1886.)

The merit of Paul Hamilton Hayne was recognized during his own life to an extent seldom known to Southern writers of that day. He counted among his friends and admirers such men as Simms, Timrod, Poe, Longfellow, Whittier, Bayard Taylor, and Swinburne. Yet his was a life of privation and suffering. He was born at Charleston, South Carolina, of a family noted for its political and social influence. He was educated at Charleston College and took the Southern poet's usual course in law. He early became one of the editors of The Southern Literary Gazette, published at Charleston, and later editor of Russell's Magazine, published at the same place. At this time his life was happy. He married a woman of wonderful character; his fortune was ample, and he enjoyed his work.

When the war began, he joined the staff of Governor Pickens; but ill health forced him to resign. His home and valuable library were destroyed in the bombardment of Charleston; the family silver and other treasures were swept away during Sherman's march to the sea; and when the war ended, he was an invalid, almost penniless, and with a family to support. He removed to Copse Hill, near Augusta, Georgia, and spent the remainder of his life in a little cottage there. His faithful wife, who had been reared in luxury, did the family cooking and washing. Amidst such environments he did the greater part of his best work. From this silent, isolated place he sent forth such works as Legends and Lyrics (1872), his introduction to Timrod's poems, The Mountain of the Lovers and Other Poems (1875), Life of Robert Y. Hayne (1878), Life of Hugh S. Legaré (1878), the Complete Edition of 1882, and many essays and poems never collected.

Verse was to Hayne almost entirely a matter of emotions, and he touched upon a great variety of sentiments. He had fancy, smoothness, simplicity, and a deep love of Nature and of the beautiful in general. In spite of the amount of sentiment there is an ever-present note of manliness and encouragement. Hamilton Mabie has said of him: "He touched the two themes which lay deepest in his heart—love of Nature and love of the personal ideals of the Old South—with perfect sincerity, with deep tenderness, and with lyric sweetness."

LYRIC OF ACTION.¹ *

'Tis the part of a coward to brood
 O'er the past that is withered and dead:
 What though the heart's roses are ashes and dust?
 What though the heart's music be fled?
 5 Still shine the grand heavens o'erhead, Whence the voice of an angel thrills clear on the soul,
 "Gird about thee thine armor, press on to the goal!"

If the faults or the crimes of thy youth
 Are a burden too heavy to bear,
 10 What hope can rebloom on the desolate waste
 Of a jealous and craven despair?
 Down, down with the fetters of fear!
 In the strength of thy valor and manhood arise,
 With the faith that illumines and the will that defies.

15 "Too late!" through God's infinite world,
 From his throne to life's nethermost fires.
 "Too late!" is a phantom that flies at the dawn
 Of the soul that repents and aspires.
 If pure thou hast made thy desires,
 20 There's no height the strong wings of immortals may gain
 Which in striving to reach thou shalt strive for in vain.

Then, up to the contest with fate,
 Unbound by the past, which is dead!
 What though the heart's roses are ashes and dust?

¹These selections are used with the permission of Mr. William H. Hayne and the publishers, Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co.

- 25 What though the heart's music be fled?
 Still shine the fair heavens o'erhead;
 And sublime as the seraph who rules in the sun*
 Beams the promise of joy when the conflict is won!

AËTHRA.

- It is a sweet tradition, with a soul
 30 Of tenderest pathos! Harken, love!—for all
 The sacred undercurrents of the heart
 Thrill to its cordial music:
 Once a chief,
 Philantus, king of Sparta, left the stern
 35 And bleak defiles of his unfruitful land—
 Girt by a band of eager colonists—
 To seek new homes on far Italian plains.*
 Apollo's oracle* had darkly spoken:
 "Where'er from cloudless skies a plenteous shower
 40 Outpours, the Fates decree that ye should pause
 And rear your household deities!"
 Racked by doubt,
 Philantus traversed with his faithful band
 Full many a bounteous realm; but still defeat
 45 Darkened his banners, and the strong-walled towns
 His desperate sieges grimly laughed to scorn!
 Weighed down by anxious thoughts, one sultry eve
 The warrior—his rude helmet cast aside—
 Rested his weary head upon the lap
 50 Of his fair wife, who loved him tenderly;
 And there he drank a generous draught of sleep.
 She, gazing on his brow, all worn with toil,
 And his dark locks, which pain had silvered over
 With glistening touches of a frosty rime,
 55 Wept on the sudden bitterly; her tears
 Fell on his face, and, wondering, he woke.
 "O blest art thou, my Aëthra,* my clear sky,"
 He cried exultant, "from whose pitying blue

A heart-rain falls to fertilize my fate!

60 Lo! the deep riddle's solved—the gods spake truth!"

So the next night he stormed Tarentum,* took
The enemy's host at vantage, and o'erthrew
His mightiest captains. Thence with kindly sway
He ruled those pleasant regions he had won;

65 But dearer even than his rich demesnes
The love of her whose gentle tears unlocked
The close-shut mystery of the Oracle!

MY STUDY.*

This is my world! within these narrow walls,
I own a princely service. The hot care

70 And tumult of our frenzied life are here
But as a ghost and echo; what befalls

In the far mart to me is less than naught;
I walk the fields of quiet Arcadies,*

And wander by the brink of hoary seas,

75 Calmed to the tendance of untroubled thought;
Or if a livelier humor should enhance

The slow-time pulse, 'tis not for present strife,
The sordid zeal with which our age is rife,

Its mammon conflicts crowned by fraud or chance,

80 But gleamings of the lost, heroic life,

Flashed through the gorgeous vistas of romance.

THE MOCKING BIRD.*

(At Night.)

A golden pallor of voluptuous light

Filled the warm southern night:

The moon, clear-orbed, above the sylvan scene

85 Moved like a stately queen,

- So rife with conscious beauty all the while,
 What could she do but smile
 At her own perfect loveliness below,
 Glassed in the tranquil flow
- ⁹⁰ Of crystal fountains and unruffled streams?
 Half lost in waking dreams,
 As down the loneliest forest dell I strayed,
 Lo! from a neighboring glade,
 Flashed through the drifts of moonshine, swiftly came
- ⁹⁵ A fairly shape of flame.
 It rose in dazzling spirals overhead,*
 Whence to wild sweetness wed,
 Poured marvelous melodies, silvery trill on trill;
 The very leaves grew still
- ¹⁰⁰ On the charmed trees to hearken; while for me,
 Heart-thrilled to ecstasy,
 I followed—followed the bright shape that flew,
 Still circling up the blue,
 Till as a fountain that has reached its height
- ¹⁰⁵ Falls back in sprays of light
 Slowly dissolved, so that enrapturing lay
 Divinely melts away
 Through tremulous spaces to a music mist,
 Soon by the fitful breeze
- ¹¹⁰ How gently kissed
 Into remote and tender silences.

THE PINE'S MYSTERY.*

I.

- Listen! the somber foliage of the Pine,
 A swart Gitana* of the woodland trees,
 Is answering what we may but half divine
- ¹¹⁵ To those soft whispers of the twilight breeze!

II.

Passion and mystery murmur through the leaves,
Passion and mystery, touched by deathless pain.
Whose monotone* of long, low anguish grieves
For something lost that shall not live again!

OCTOBER.

- ¹²⁰The passionate summer's dead! the sky's aglow
With roseate flushes of matured desire,
The winds at eve are musical and low.
As sweeping chords of a lamenting lyre,
Far up among the pillared clouds of fire.
- ¹²⁵Whose pomp of strange procession upward rolls,
With gorgeous blazonry of pictured scrolls,
To celebrate the summer's past renown;
Ah, me! how regally the heavens look down,
O'ershadowing beautiful autumnal woods
- ¹³⁰And harvest fields with hoarded increase brown,
And deep-toned majesty of golden floods,
That raise their solemn dirges to the sky,
To swell the purple pomp that floateth by.

JAMES RYDER RANDALL.

(1839-1908.)

With the exception of Dirie, perhaps the most popular song in the Confederate camps was Maryland, My Maryland. Its author, James Ryder Randall, of Baltimore, was a professor (1861) in Poydras College, Pointe Coupee, Louisiana, and it was while at this place that he arose one night from a wild dream and wrote the words. Soon afterwards Mrs. Burton Harrison set the poem to an old college melody, Lauriger Horatius. In Randall we have another instance of a man made famous by one song.

MY MARYLAND.

The despot's heel is on thy shore,
Maryland!
His torch is at thy temple door,
Maryland!
5 Avenge the patriotic gore*
That flecked the streets of Baltimore,
And be the battle queen of yore,
Maryland, my Maryland!

Hark to an exiled son's appeal,
10 Maryland!
My Mother State, to thee I kneel,
Maryland!
For life and death, for woe and weal,
Thy peerless chivalry reveal,
15 And gird thy beauteous limbs with steel,
Maryland, my Maryland!

Thou wilt not cower in the dust,
Maryland!
Thy beaming sword shall never rust,
20 Maryland!
Remember Carroll's* sacred trust,
Remember Howard's* warlike thrust,
And all thy slumberers with the just,
Maryland, my Maryland!

25 Come! 'tis the red dawn of the day,
 Maryland!
 Come with thy panoplied array,
 Maryland!
 With Ringgold's* spirit for the fray,
 30 With Watson's* blood at Monterey,
 With fearless Lowe* and dashing May,*
 Maryland, my Maryland!

Dear Mother! burst the tyrant's chain,
 Maryland!
 35 Virginia should not call in vain,
 Maryland!
 She meets her sisters on the plain—
 "Sic semper!"* 'tis the proud refrain
 That baffles minions back amain,
 40 Maryland!
 Arise in majesty again,
 Maryland, my Maryland!

Come! for thy shield is bright and strong,
 Maryland!
 45 Come! for thy dalliance does thee wrong,
 Maryland!
 Come to thine own heroic throng
 Walking with Liberty along,
 And chant thy dauntless slogan-song,
 50 Maryland, my Maryland!

I see the blush upon thy cheek,
 Maryland!
 For thou wast ever bravely meek,
 Maryland!
 55 But lo! there surges forth a shriek.
 From hill to hill, from creek to creek,
 Potomac calls to Chesapeake,
 Maryland, my Maryland!

Thou wilt not yield the Vandal* toll,
 60 Maryland!
 Thou wilt not crook to his control,
 Maryland!
 Better the fire upon thee roll,
 Better the shot, the blade, the bowl,
 65 Than crucifixion of the soul,
 Maryland, my Maryland!

I hear the distant thunder hum,
 Maryland!
 70 The Old Line bugle, fife, and drum,
 Maryland!
 She is not dead, nor deaf, nor dumb;
 Huzza! she spurns the Northern scum!*
 She breathes—she burns! she'll come! she'll come!
 Maryland, my Maryland!

ABRAM JOSEPH RYAN.

(1839-1886.)

Father Ryan has been one of the most widely read poets in America. His poems, like those of Longfellow, create a love for poetry. He was born at Norfolk, Virginia, but early removed to St. Louis. He was educated there and prepared for the priesthood at Niagara, New York. After serving through the war as a Confederate chaplain, he had charge of churches in various cities, among them Nashville and Knoxville, Tennessee; Augusta, Georgia; and Mobile, Alabama; and in all of these places he became known and beloved because of his energetic support of good causes, his genial disposition, and his interest in young men. At length, his health having failed, he went for rest to the monastery near Louisville, Kentucky, and there he died. The most characteristic trait of his verse is its unaffected sadness. He was not a master of the technical phases of poetry; but his work is always melodious and unlabored. If none of his other poems were known, The Conquered Banner would keep his memory green for generations.

THE CONQUERED BANNER.¹*

- Furl that Banner, for 'tis weary;
Round its staff 'tis drooping dreary;
Furl it, fold it, it is best;
For there's not a man to wave it,
⁵ And there's not a sword to save it,
And there's not one left to lave it
In the blood which heroes gave it;
And its foes now scorn and brave it;
Furl it, hide it—let it rest!
- ¹⁰ Take that Banner down! 'tis tattered;
Broken is its staff and shattered;
And the valiant hosts are scattered
Over whom it floated high.
O! 'tis hard for us to fold it!
¹⁵ Hard to think there's none to hold it;
Hard that those who once unrolled it
Now must furl it with a sigh.

¹Selected from Father Ryan's Poems. Copyright, P. J. Kennedy & Sons, New York.

Furl that Banner! furl it sadly!
 Once ten thousands hailed it gladly,
 20 And ten thousands wildly, madly,
 Swore it should forever wave;
 Swore that foeman's sword should never
 Hearts like theirs entwined dis sever,
 Till that flag should float forever
 25 O'er their freedom or their grave!

Furl it! for the hands that grasped it,
 And the hearts that fondly clasped it,
 Cold and dead are lying low;
 And that Banner—it is trailing!
 30 While around it sounds the wailing
 Of its people in their woe.

For, though conquered, they adore it!
 Love the cold, dead hands that bore it!
 Weep for those who fell before it!
 35 Pardon those who trailed and tore it!
 But, O! wildly they deplore it,
 Now who furl and fold it so.

Furl that Banner! True, 'tis gory,
 Yet 'tis wreathed around with glory,
 40 And 'twill live in song and story,
 Though its folds are in the dust!
 For its fame on brightest pages,
 Penned by poets and by sages,
 Shall go sounding down the ages—
 45 Furl its folds though now we must.

Furl that Banner, softly, slowly!
 Treat it gently—it is holy—
 For it droops above the dead.
 Touch it not—unfold it never,
 50 Let it droop there, furl'd forever,
 For its people's hopes are fled!

NIGHT THOUGHTS.*

Some reckon their age by years,
Some measure their life by art;
But some tell their days by the flow of their tears,
55 And their life, by the moans of their heart.

The dials of earth may show
The length,—not the depth of years;
Few or many they come, few or many they go,
But our time is best measured by tears.

60 Ah! not by the silver gray
That creeps through the sunny hair,
And not by the scenes that we pass on our way,
And not by the furrows the fingers of care,

On forehead and face have made:
65 Not so do we count our year;
Not by the sun of the earth, but the shade
Of our souls, and the fall of our tears.

For the young are oftentimes old,
Though their brow be bright and fair;
70 While their blood beats warm, their heart lies cold—
O'er them the springtime, but winter is there.

And the old are oftentimes young,
When their hair is thin and white;
And they sing in age, as in youth they sung,
75 And they laugh, for their cross was light.

But bead by bead I tell
The rosary of my years;
From a cross to a cross they lead,—'tis well!
And they're blest with a blessing of tears.

80 Better a day of strife*
 Than a century of sleep;
 Give me instead of a long stream of life
 The tempests and tears of the deep.

A thousand joys may foam
 85 On the billows of all the years;
 But never the foam brings the lone heart home—
 It reaches the haven through tears.

THE SWORD OF ROBERT LEE.*

Forth from its scabbard, pure and bright,
 Flashed the sword of Lee!
 90 Far in the front of the deadly fight,
 High o'er the brave in the cause of Right,
 Its stainless sheen, like a beacon light,
 Led us to victory.

Out of its scabbard, where full long
 95 It slumbered peacefully,
 Roused from its rest by the battle's song,
 Shielding the feeble, smiting the strong,
 Guarding the right, avenging the wrong,
 Gleamed the sword of Lee.

100 Forth from its scabbard, high in air
 Beneath Virginia's sky—
 And they who saw it gleaming there,
 And knew who bore it, knelt to swear
 That where that sword led they would dare
 105 To follow—and to die.

Out of its scabbard! Never hand
 Waved sword from stain as free;
 Nor purer sword led braver band,

Nor braver bled for a brighter land,
 110 Nor brighter land had a cause so grand,
 Nor cause a chief like Lee!

Forth from its scabbard! How we prayed
 That sword might victor be!
 And when our triumph was delayed,
 115 And many a heart grew sore afraid,
 We still hoped on while gleamed the blade
 Of noble Robert Lee.

Forth from its scabbard all in vain
 Bright flashed the sword of Lee;
 120 'Tis shrouded now in its sheath again,
 It sleeps the sleep of our noble slain,
 Defeated, yet without a stain,
 Proudly and peacefully.

SONG OF THE MYSTIC.*

I walk down the Valley of Silence—
 125 Down the dim, voiceless valley—alone!
 And I hear not the fall of a footstep
 Around me, save God's and my own;
 And the hush of my heart is as holy
 As hovers where angels have flown!

130 Long ago was I weary of voices
 Whose music my heart could not win;
 Long ago was I weary of noises
 That fretted my soul with their din;
 Long ago was I weary of places
 135 Where I met but the human—and sin.

I walked in the world with the worldly;
 I craved what the world never gave;

And I said: "In the world each Ideal
That shines like a star on life's wave
140 Is wrecked on the shores of the Real,
And sleeps like a dream in a grave."

And still did I pine for the Perfect,
And still found the False with the True ;
I sought 'mid the Human for Heaven,
145 But caught a mere glimpse of its Blue :
And I toiled on, heart-tired of the Human,
Veiled even that glimpse from my view.

And I toiled on, heart-tired of the Human,
And I moaned 'mid the mazes of men,
150 Till I knelt, long ago, at an altar,
And I heard a voice call me. Since then
I walked down the Valley of Silence
That lies far beyond mortal ken.

Do you ask what I found in the Valley?
155 'Tis my Trysting Place with the Divine.
And I fell at the feet of the Holy,
And above me a voice said: "Be Mine."
And there arose from the depths of my spirit
An echo: "My heart shall be thine."

160 Do you ask how I live in the Valley?
I weep—and I dream—and I pray.
But my tears are as sweet as the dewdrops
That fall on the roses in May ;
And my prayer, like a perfume from censers,
165 Ascendeth to God night and day.

In the hush of the Valley of Silence
I dream all the songs that I sing ;
And the music floats down the dim Valley,
Till each finds a word for a wing,

170 That to hearts, like the dove of the deluge,
A message of peace they may bring.

But far on the deep there are billows
That never shall break on the beach;
And I have heard songs in the Silence
175 That never shall float into speech;
And I have had dreams in the Valley
Too lofty for language to reach.

And I have seen Thoughts in the Valley—
Ah me! how my spirit was stirred!
180 And they wear holy veils on their faces,
Their footsteps can scarcely be heard:
They pass through the Valley like virgins,
Too pure for the touch of a word!

Do you ask me the place of the Valley,
185 Ye hearts that are harrowed by care?
It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and His angels are there:
And one is the dark mount of Sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of Prayer.

v.

THE NEW SOUTH.

(1875-1907.)

GENERAL SURVEY.

Rightly indeed have the modern conditions of the Southern States been placed within the conception: "The New South." A vast change has taken place since 1865. Henry Grady has expressed it well: "The old South rested everything on slavery and agriculture, unconscious that these could neither give nor maintain healthy growth. The new South presents a perfect democracy, the oligarchs leading in the popular movement—a social system compact and closely knitted, less splendid on the surface, but stronger at the core—a hundred farms for every plantation, fifty houses for every palace, and a diversified industry that meets the complex needs of this complex age."

The talk of an "oppressed South" has now become an unavailing weapon, even in the hands of the unscrupulous politician, and in its place has come a realization of the wonderful resources, advantages, and undoubted future greatness of the section. This has given an impetus to such an industrial development as can scarcely be paralleled in any other portion of the world. The cotton, iron, lumber, and sugar alone of the South seem destined to make it a veritable treasure land.

With all this there has come a genuine revival in literary work. Judge Tourgée has said: "A foreigner studying our current literature without knowledge of our history, and judging our civilization by our fiction, would undoubtedly conclude that the South was the seat of intellectual empire in America." Poetry has not kept pace with fiction ; but among the leading verse writers of to-day no small number are from the South.

SIDNEY LANIER.

(1842-1881.)

In Sidney Lanier we find a true genius. Year by year students of literature are coming nearer and nearer to the realization of the fact that in this man America had a most original, deep, and melodious poet—one capable of bearing comparison with the greater lights of the world's literature. He was born at Macon, Georgia, and at the age of fifteen entered Oglethorpe College, near Milledgeville, Georgia, an institution which was unworthy of the name "college." After graduating he was appointed instructor in this school, but had served only a few months when he joined the Confederate army. He saw much hard service, and during the last months of the war was a prisoner at Point Lookout.

The privations suffered in this place were so great that it was over a year before he was able to work. In 1867 he took charge of a school at Prattville, Alabama, married Miss Mary Day, of Macon, Georgia, and continued the literary work which he had begun during war days. In 1868 the hardships of the great strife again began to show their effect, and he had to give up his school and return to Macon. Seeing that life was from this time forth to be but a struggle with death, he determined to risk all for the sake of literary work. He had inherited astonishing musical ability, and was at this time probably the best flute player in America. Consequently in 1873 he secured the position of first flute in the Peabody Symphony Orchestra of Baltimore, and in that city the busiest years of his career were spent. He became a lecturer in Johns Hopkins University, taught private classes, played several nights in each week, and wrote constantly. By 1880 the battle for life was an hourly struggle. He wrote his greatest poem, Sunrise, at a time when he was too weak to feed himself and while his fever was at one hundred and four. In 1881 he was taken to the mountains of North Carolina, first near Asheville and later at Lynn, where on September 7 the struggle was ended.

Among Lanier's works may be mentioned Tiger Lilies, a novel; his volume of lectures, entitled The English Novel; Music and Poetry; and his valuable Science of English Verse. Of his poems, the greatest perhaps are Corn, The Hymns of the Marshes, The Song of the Chattahoochee, and Sunrise. Lanier had a theory that time and not accent is the basis of poetic rhythm. Every line of verse thus divides itself into measures equivalent to those in music. For instance, he would divide these lines of Tennyson's into portions of two units each:

Break,		Break,		Break,
On thy	cold	gray	stones,	O	sea!

By this system he obtained symphonic effects rarely equaled in the poetry of any nation. The dignity, emotionalism, and sweeping, majestic movement of his lines lift the thought above earth and compel notice by the mode of its utterance. Here indeed is what Hamilton Wright Mabie has called "the large elemental movement of imagination, . . . a movement which has a touch of tidal depth and reach in it, a hint of cosmical power and meaning."

A BALLAD OF TREES AND THE MASTER.^{1*}

Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent,
Into the woods my Master came,
Forspent with love and shame.

⁵ But the olives they were not blind to Him,
The little gray leaves were kind to Him:
The thorn tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.

Out of the woods my Master went,
¹⁰ And He was well content.
Out of the woods my Master came,
Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last,
From under the trees they drew Him last:
¹⁵ 'Twas on a tree they slew Him last,
When out of the woods He came.

THE MARSHES OF GLYNN.¹

Glooms of the live-oaks, beautiful-braided and woven
With intricate shades of the vines that myriad-cloven

¹These poems are used with the permission of Mary D. Lanier and the publishers, Charles Scribner's Sons.

Clamber the forks of the multiform boughs—
 20 Emerald twilights,
 Virginal shy lights,
 Wrought of the leaves to allure to the whisper of vows,
 When lovers pace timidly down through the green colonnades
 Of the dim sweet woods, of the dear dark woods,*
 25 Of the heavenly woods and glades,
 That run to the radiant marginal sand beach within
 The wide sea marshes of Glynn;—

Beautiful glooms, soft dusks in the noonday fire,
 Wildwood privacies, closets of lone desire,
 30 Chamber from chamber parted with wavering arras*
 of leaves—
 Cells for the passionate pleasure of prayer* to the soul that grieves,
 Pure with a sense of the passing of saints through the wood,
 Cool for the dutiful weighing of ill with good;—

O braided dusks of the oak and woven shades of the vine,
 35 While the riotous noonday sun of the June day long did shine
 Ye held me fast in your heart and I held you fast in mine;
 But now when the noon is no more, and riot is rest,
 And the sun is a-wait at the ponderous gate of the West,
 And the slant yellow beam down the wood-aisle doth seem
 40 Like a lane into heaven that leads from a dream—
 Ay, now, when my soul all day hath drunken the soul of the oak,*
 And my heart is at ease from men, and the wearisome sound of the stroke

Of the scythe of time and the trowel of trade is low,
 And belief overmasters doubt, and I know that I know,
 45 And my spirit is grown to a lordly great compass within,
 That the length and the breadth and the sweep of the marshes of Glynn
 Will work me no fear like the fear they have wrought me of yore
 When length was fatigue, and when breadth was but bitterness sore,
 And when terror and shrinking and dreary un-namable pain
 50 Drew over me out of the merciless miles of the plain—

O, now unafraid, I am fain to face
 The vast sweet visage of space.
 To the edge of the wood I am drawn, I am drawn,
 Where the gray beach glimmering runs, as a belt of the dawn,
 55 For a mete and a mark
 To the forest dark—
 So:
 Affable live-oak, leaning low,
 Thus—with your favor—soft, with a reverent hand, 60 (Not lightly touching your person, Lord of the land!)
 Bending your beauty aside, with a step I stand
 On the firm-packed sand,
 Free
 By a world of marsh that borders a world of sea.
 65 Sinuous southward and sinuous northward the shimmering band
 Of the sand beach fastens the fringe of the marsh to the folds of the land.

- Inward and outward to northward and southward the beach-lines linger and curl
 As a silver-wrought garment that clings to and follows the firm sweet limbs of a girl.
 Vanishing, swerving, evermore curving again into sight,
- 70 Softly the sand beach wavers away to a dim gray looping of light.
 And what if behind me to westward the wall of the woods stands high?
 The world lies east: how ample, the marsh and the sea and the sky!
 A league and a league of marsh grass, waist-high,
 broad in the blade,
 Green, and all of a height, and unflecked with a light or a shade,
- 75 Stretch leisurely off, in a pleasant plain,
 To the terminal blue of the main.
- O, what is abroad in the marsh and the terminal sea?
 Somehow my soul seems suddenly free
 From the weighing of fate and the sad discussion of sin,
- 80 By the length and the breadth and the sweep of the marshes of Glynn.
- Ye marshes, how candid and simple and nothing withholding and free
 Ye publish yourselves to the sky and offer yourselves to the sea!
 Tolerant plains, that suffer the sea and the rains and the sun,
 Ye spread and span like the catholic* man who hath mightily won
- 85 God out of knowledge and good out of infinite pain
 And sight out of blindness and purity out of a stain.

As the marsh hen secretly builds on the watery sod,*

Behold I will build me a nest on the greatness of God:

I will fly in the greatness of God as the marsh hen flies

⁹⁰ In the freedom that fills all the space 'twixt the marsh and the skies:

By so many roots as the marsh grass sends in the sod

I will heartily lay me a-hold on the greatness of God:

O, like to the greatness of God is the greatness within

The range of the marshes, the liberal marshes of Glynn.

⁹⁵ And the sea lends large, as the marsh: lo, out of his plenty the sea

Pours fast: full soon the time of the floodtide must be:

Look how the grace of the sea doth go
About and about through the intricate channels that flow

Here and there,

¹⁰⁰ Everywhere,

Till his waters have flooded the uttermost creeks
and the low-lying lanes,

And the marsh is meshed with a million veins,
That like as with rosy and silvery essences flow
In the rose-and-silver evening glow.

¹⁰⁵ Farewell, my lord Sun!*

The creeks overflow: a thousand rivulets run
'Twixt the roots of the sod; the blades of the marsh grass stir;

Passeth a hurrying sound of wings that westward
whir;

Passeth, and all is still; and the currents cease to run;
110 And the sea and the marsh are one.

How still the plains of the waters be!
The tide is in his ecstasy.
The tide is at his highest height:
And it is night.
115 And now from the Vast of the Lord will the waters of sleep
Roll in on the souls of men,
But who will reveal to our waking ken
The forms that swim and the shapes that creep
Under the waters of sleep?
120 And I would I could know what swimmeth below when the tide comes in
On the length and the breadth of the marvelous marshes of Glynn.

SONG OF THE CHATTAHOOCHEE.*

Out of the hills of Habersham,*
Down the valleys of Hall,*
I hurry amain to reach the plain,
125 Run the rapid and leap the fall,
Split at the rock and together again,
Accept my bed, or narrow or wide,
And flee from folly on every side
With a lover's pain to attain the plain
130 Far from the hills of Habersham,
Far from the valleys of Hall.

All down the hills of Habersham,
All through the valleys of Hall,
The rushes cried, Abide, abide.*
135 The willful waterweeds held me thrall.

The laving laurels turned my tide,
 The ferns and the fondling grass said, Stay,
 The dewberry dipped for to work delay,
 And the little reeds sighed, Abide, abide,
¹⁴⁰ Here in the hills of Habersham,
Here in the valleys of Hall.

High o'er the hills of Habersham,
 Veiling the valleys of Hall,
 The hickory told me manifold
¹⁴⁵ Fair tales of shade, the poplar tall
 Wrought me her shadowy self to hold,
 The chestnut, the oak, the walnut, the pine,
 Overleaning, with flickering meaning and sign,
 Said, Pass not, so cold, these manifold
¹⁵⁰ Deep shades of the hills of Habersham,
These glades in the valleys of Hall.

And oft in the hills of Habersham,
 And oft in the valleys of Hall,
 The white quartz shone, and the smooth brook-stone
¹⁵⁵ Did bar me of passage with friendly brawl,
 And many a luminous jewel lone —Crystals clear or a-cloud with mist,
 Ruby, garnet, and amethyst—
 Made lures with the lights of streaming stone
¹⁶⁰ In the clefts of the hills of Habersham,
 In the beds of the valleys of Hall.

But O, not the hills of Habersham,
 And O, not the valleys of Hall
 Avail: I am fain for to water the plain.
¹⁶⁵ Downward the voices of Duty call—
 Downward, to toil and be mixed with the main,
 The dry fields burn, and the mills are to turn,

And a myriad flowers mortally yearn,
 And the lordly main from beyond the plain
 170 Calls o'er the hills of Habersham,
 Calls through the valleys of Hall.

JOHN HENRY BONER.

(1845-1903.)

John Henry Boner was born at Salem, North Carolina. He edited papers at Salem and at Asheville, and, entering politics, became chief clerk of the North Carolina House of Representatives. In 1887 he removed to New York City and took up literary work. Much of his work has a distinctly Southern flavor.

POE'S COTTAGE AT FORDHAM.*

Here lived the soul enchanted
 By melody of song;
 Here dwelt the spirit haunted
 By a demoniac throng;
 5 Here sang the lips elated;
 Here grief and death were sated;
 Here loved and here unmated
 Was he, so frail, so strong.

Here wintry winds and cheerless*
 10 The dying firelight blew,
 While he whose song was peerless
 Dreamed the drear midnight through,
 And from dull embers chilling
 Crept shadows darkly filling
 15 The silent place, and thrilling
 His fancy as they grew.

Here, with brow bared to heaven,
 In starry night he stood,
 With the lost star of seven*
 20 Feeling sad brotherhood.
 Here in the sobbing showers
 Of dark autumnal hours
 He heard suspected powers*
 Shriek through the stormy wood.

25 From visions of Apollo*
 And of Astarte's* bliss,
 He gazed into the hollow
 And hopeless vale of Dis;*
 And though earth were surrounded
 30 By heaven, it still was mounded
 With graves. His soul had sounded
 The dolorous abyss.

Proud, mad, but not defiant,*
 He touched at heaven and hell.
 35 Fate found a rare soul pliant
 And rung her changes well.
 Alternately his lyre,
 Stranded with strings of fire,
 Led earth's most happy choir
 40 Or flashed with Israfel.*

No singer of old story
 Luting accustomed lays,
 No harper for new glory,
 No mendicant for praise,
 45 He struck high chords and splendid,
 Wherein were fiercely blended
 Tones that unfinished ended
 With his unfinished days.

Here through this lowly portal,
 50 Made sacred by his name,
 Unheralded immortal
 The mortal went and came.
 And fate that then denied him,
 And envy that decried him,
 55 And malice that belied him,*
 Have cenotaphed his fame.

THE LIGHT'OOD FIRE.¹*

When wintry days are dark and drear
 And all the forest ways grow still,
 When gray snow-laden clouds appear
 60 Along the bleak horizon hill,
 When cattle all are snugly penned
 And sheep go huddling close together,
 When steady streams of smoke ascend
 From farmhouse chimneys—in such weather
 65 Give me old Carolina's own,
 A great log house, a great hearthstone,
 A cheering pipe of cob or brier,
 And a red, leaping light'ood fire.

When dreary day draws to a close
 70 And all the silent land is dark,
 When Boreas* down the chimney blows
 And sparks fly from the crackling bark,
 When limbs are bent with snow or sleet
 And owls hoot from the hollow tree,
 75 With hounds asleep about your feet,
 Then is the time for reverie.

¹From Whispering Pines, published by Brentano's, New York.

80 Give me old Carolina's own,
 A hospitable wide hearthstone,
 A cheering pipe of cob or brier,
 And a red, rousing light'ood fire.

JOHN BANISTER TABB.

(1845- .)

John Banister Tabb was born in Amelia County, Virginia. He served in the Confederate army, and was a prisoner with Sidney Lanier at Point Lookout. He became a Catholic priest in 1884, and soon afterwards was made professor of English literature in St. Charles College, Maryland. His lyrics have received wide notice.

THE HALF-RING MOON.¹

Over the sea, over the sea,
 My love he is gone to a far countrie;
 But he brake a golden ring with me
 The pledge of his faith to be.

⁵ Over the sea, over the sea,
 He comes no more from the far countrie;
 But at night, where the new moon loved to be,
 Hangs the half of a ring for me.

¹These selections are from Poems by John B. Tabb. By permission of the author and the publishers, Small, Maynard & Co.

MY STAR.

Since the dewdrop holds the star
10 The long night through,
Perchance the satellite afar
 Reflects the dew.

And while thine image in my heart
 Doth steadfast shine,
15 There, haply, in thy heaven apart
 Thou keepest mine.

GEORGE HERBERT SASS.

(1845-1908.)

Born at Charleston, South Carolina, George Herbert Sass was educated at the College of Charleston, where he graduated in 1867. He early began to contribute verse to the periodicals, under the name "Barton Grey;" but his poems were not collected until 1904. Doubtless the best-known lines in this volume, The Heart's Quest—A Book of Verses, are those entitled In a King-Cambyses Vein.

IN A KING-CAMBYSES VEIN.¹

Cambyses, King of the Persians,
Sat with his lords at play

¹From The Heart's Quest—A Book of Verses. By Barton Grey. Copyright, 1904, by George Herbert Sass. Used by permission of the author.

Where the shades of the broad plane-branches
Slanted athwart the way.

⁵ And he listened and heard Prexaspes
Tell to his fellows there
Of a Bactrian bowman's prowess
And skill beyond compare.

And the heart of the King was bitter,
¹⁰ And he turned and said to him:
"Dost see on the greensward yonder
That plane-tree's slender limb?"

"It stands far off in the gloaming—
Dost think thy Bactrian could
¹⁵ With a single shaft unerring
Smite through that slender wood?"

"But nay," then said Prexaspes,
"Nor ever a mortal man
Since the days when Nimrod hunted
²⁰ Where great Euphrates ran."

Then Cambyses, son of Cyrus,
Looked, and before him there
Meres, the King's cupbearer,
Stood where the wine flowed clear.

²⁵ Meres, the King's cupbearer,
Prexaspes' only son,
And the heart of the King was hardened,
And the will of the King was done.

And he said: "Bind Meres yonder
³⁰ To the plane-tree's slender stem,
And give me yon sheaf of arrows
And the bow that lies by them."

And so, when the guards had bound him,
He drew the shaft to the head;
35 "Give heed! give heed, Prexaspes,
I aim for the heart!" he said.

Sharp through the twilight stillness
Echoed the steel bow's twang;
Loud through the twilight stillness
40 The courtiers' plaudits rang.

And the head of the boy drooped downward,
And the quivering shaft stood still;
And the King said: "O, Prexaspes, Match I thy Bactrian's skill?"

45 Then low before Cambyses
The Satrap bowed his head—
"O, great King, live forever!
Thou hast cleft the heart!" he said.

CARLYLE M'KINLEY.

(1847-1904.)

Carlyle McKinley was born at Newnan, Georgia, and was educated at the University of Georgia. After serving in the Confederate army until the close of the Civil War, he entered the Southern Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Columbia, South Carolina, where he graduated in 1874. During the next year he became a member of the staff of the Charleston News and Courier, with which paper he was connected at the time of his death. Selections from the Poems of Carlyle McKinley was published in 1904.

SAPELO.¹*

Far from thy shores, enchanted isle,
To-night I claim a brief surcease
From toil and pain, to dream awhile
Of thy still peace—

⁵ To wander on thy shining strand,
And lose awhile life's troubled flow;
Its tumults die upon thy sand,
Blest Sapelo.

The sun is setting in the west;
¹⁰ The last light fades on land and sea;
The silence woos all things to rest—
And wooeth me.

So here I lie, with half-closed eye,
Careless, without one vexing thought,
¹⁵ While cool uncounted hours drift by
In dreamy sort.

And ever, sweet thoughts without words,
The shadows of old memories,
Rise up and float away, as birds
²⁰ Float down the skies.

In dreams I see the live-oak groves;
In dreams I hear the curlews cry,
Or watch the little mourning doves
Speed softly by.

²⁵ I hear the surf beat on the sands,
And murmurous voices from the sea;

¹From Selections from the Poems of Carlyle McKinley, 1904.

The wanton waves toss their white hands,
 And beckon me.*

.

The waves are murmuring on the beach,
 30 A soft wind whispers in the palm;
 There is no sound of ruder speech
 To mar the calm.

The happy sun comes up once more
 Above the woods I know so well;
 35 The rosy heaven from shore to shore
 Glows like a shell.

I see the great old trees and tall,
 Sheeted with tangled vines that sweep
 From limb to limb—a leafy pall,
 40 Where shadows sleep.

The long moss waves in every breeze,
 Like tattered banners, old and gray;
 And sigh and sigh the old, old trees
 All night, all day.

45 With flower and fruit at once arrayed,
 The orange groves are passing fair,
 As though all seasons loved such shade
 And lingered there.*

.

The turning tide runs slowly out;
 50 I hear the marsh birds calling shrill;
 The toiling oarsmen's song and shout
 Come to me still.

I hear their boat songs through the night;
 I think it is my heart that hears
 65 The old songs sounding yet, despite These long, long years.

White clouds are drifting out to sea,
 Like clouds the great ships come and go,
 As strange, and white, and silently,
 60 As soft and slow.

From far-off lands, like tired things,
 They wander hither o'er the deep.
 Here all things rest, they fold their wings
 And fall asleep.*

.

WILL HENRY THOMPSON.

(1848- .)

Will Henry Thompson was born at Calhoun, Georgia, and while yet a boy entered the Confederate army and served until the close of the Civil War. In 1868 he removed to Crawfordsville, Indiana, and entered into a law partnership with his brother, the well-known writer, Maurice Thompson. He removed to Seattle, Washington, in 1889. He is distinguished as an orator, and has shown considerable ability in his vigorous and often vivid verse.

*THE HIGH TIDE AT GETTYSBURG.¹

A cloud possessed the hollow field,
 The gathering battle's smoky shield.
 Athwart the gloom the lightning flashed,
 And through the cloud some horsemen dashed,
 5 And from the heights the thunder pealed.

¹By permission of the Century Company, Publishers.

Then at the brief command of Lee*
 Moved out that matchless infantry,
 With Pickett* leading grandly down,
 To rush against the roaring crown
 10 Of those dread knights of destiny.

Far heard above the angry guns
 A cry across the tumult runs—
 The voice that rang through Shiloh's* woods
 And Chickamauga's* solitudes,
 15 The fierce South cheering on her sons!

Ah, how the withering tempest blew
 Against the front of Pettigrew!*
 A Khansin wind that scorched and singed
 Like that infernal flame that fringed 20 The British squares at Waterloo!*

A thousand fell where Kemper* led,
 A thousand died where Garnett* bled:
 In blinding flame and strangling smoke
 The remnant through the batteries broke
 25 And crossed the works with Armistead.

“Once more in Glory's van with me!”
 Virginia cried to Tennessee;
 “We two together, come what may,
 Shall stand upon these works to-day!”
 30 (The reddest day in history.)

Brave Tennessee! In reckless way
 Virginia heard her comrade say:
 “Close round this rent and riddled rag!”
 What time she set her battle flag
 35 Amid the guns of Doubleday.*

But who shall break the guards that wait
 Before the awful face of fate?

The tattered standards of the South
Were shriveled at the cannon's mouth,
40 And all her hopes were desolate.

In vain the Tennessean set
His breast against the bayonet!
In vain Virginia charged and raged,
A tigress in her wrath uncaged,
45 Till all the hill was red and wet!

Above the bayonets mixed and crossed,
Men saw a gray, gigantic ghost
Receding through the battle cloud,
And heard across the tempest loud
50 The death cry of a nation lost!

The brave went down! Without disgrace
They leaped to Ruin's red embrace.
They only heard Fame's thunders wake
And saw the dazzling sunburst break
55 In smiles on Glory's bloody face!

They fell, who lifted up a hand
And bade the sun in heaven to stand!
They smote and fell, who set the bars
Against the progress of the stars,
60 And stayed the march of Motherland!

They stood, who saw the future come
On through the fight's delirium!
They smote and stood, who held the hope
Of nations on that slippery slope
65 Amid the cheers of Christendom.

God lives! He forged the iron will
That clutched and held that trembling hill.
God lives and reigns! He built and lent
The heights for Freedom's battlement
70 Where floats her flag in triumph still!

Fold up the banners! Smelt the guns!
 Love rules! Her gentler purpose runs.
 A mighty mother turns in tears
 The pages of her battle years,
 75 Lamenting all her fallen sons!

ROBERT BURNS WILSON.

(1850- .)

Robert Burns Wilson was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, but early removed to Frankfort, Kentucky. There he became an artist. His pictures have attracted considerable attention and praise. His verse contributed to the various American magazines is smooth and musical.

DEDICATION.¹

The green Virginian hills were blithe in May,
 And we were plucking violets—thou and I.
 A transient gladness flooded earth and sky;
 Thy fading strength seemed to return that day,
 5 And I was mad with hope that God would stay
 Death's pale approach—O! all hath long passed by!
 Long years! long years! and now, I well know why Thine eyes, quick filled with tears, were turned away.
 First loved; first lost; my mother: time must still ¹These selections are from Life and Love. Cassell Publishing Company. By permission of the author.

- 10 Leave my soul's debt uncanceled. All that's best
 In me and in my art is thine: Me-seems Even now we walk a-field. Through good and ill
 My sorrowing heart forgets not, and in dreams
 I see thee in the sun-lands of the blest.

THE DEATH OF WINTER.

- 15 Pierced by the sun's bright arrows, Winter lies
 With dabbled robes upon the blurred hillside;
 Fast runs the clear cold blood, in vain he tries
 With cooling breath to check the flowing tide.
- He faintly hears the footsteps of fair Spring
 20 Advancing through the woodland to the dell;
 Anon she stops to hear the waters sing,
 And call the flowers, that know her voice full well.
- Ah, now she smiles to see the glancing stream;
 She stirs the dead leaves with her anxious feet;
 25 She stoops to plant the first awakening beam,
 And woos the cold Earth with warm breathings sweet.
- "Ah, gentle mistress, doth thy soul rejoice
 To find me thus laid low? So fair thou art!
 Let me but hear the music of thy voice;
 30 Let me but die upon thy pitying heart.
- Soon endeth life for me. Thou wilt be blessed;
 The flowering fields, the budding trees be thine.
 Grant me the pillow of thy fragrant breast;
 Then come, oblivion, I no more repine."

35 Thus urged the dying Winter. She, the fair,
Whose heart hath love, and only love, to give,
Did quickly lay her full warm bosom bare
For his cold cheek, and fondly whispered "Live."

His cold white lips close to her heart she pressed;
40 Her sighs were mingled with each breath he drew;
And when the strong life faded, on her breast
Her own soft tears fell down like heavenly dew.

O ye sweet blossoms of the whispering lea,
Ye fair, frail children of the woodland wide,
45 Ye are the fruit of that dear love which she Did give to wounded Winter ere he died.

And some are tinted like her eyes of blue,
Some hold the blush that on her cheek did glow,
Some from her lips have caught their scarlet hue,
50 But more still keep the whiteness of the snow.

IRWIN RUSSELL.

(1853-1879.)

During his brief life Irwin Russell produced some striking work along the line of negro dialect verse. In fact, he was one of the first to realize the literary value of the negro character and dialect. He was born at Port Gibson, Mississippi, but early in his childhood his family removed to St. Louis, and there in the public schools and in St. Louis University he received his education. He studied law, but did not practice it. His work appeared first in Scribner's Mag- azine for January, 1876, and was well received. In December, 1878, he went to New York to engage in literary work, but severe illness compelled him to return South. He went to New Orleans, suffered great privations, and died there in December, 1879. He seemed to know the very soul of the old-time negro, and few have equaled him in such delineations. Such writers as Joel Chandler Harris and Thomas Nelson Page have gratefully acknowledged their indebtedness to him.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT IN THE QUARTERS.¹*

When merry Christmas day is done,
 And Christmas night is just begun;
 While clouds in slow procession drift,
 To wish the moon-man "Christmas gift,"
 5 Yet linger overhead, to know
 What causes all the stir below—
 At Uncle Johnny Booker's ball
 The darkies hold high carnival.
 From all the countryside they throng,
 10 With laughter, shouts, and scraps of song—
 Their whole deportment plainly showing
 That to the Frolic they are going.
 Some take the path with shoes in hand,
 To traverse muddy bottom land;
 15 Aristocrats their steeds bestride—
 Four on a mule, behold them ride!
 And ten great oxen draw apace
 The wagon from "de oder place,"
 With forty guests, whose conversation
 20 Betokens glad anticipation.

¹By permission of the Century Company, Publishers.

Not so with him who drives: old Jim
 Is sagely solemn, hard, and grim,
 And frolics have no joys for him.
 He seldom speaks but to condemn—
 25 Or utter some wise apothegm—
 Or else, some crabbed thought pursuing,
 Talk to his team, as now he's doing:

—
 Come up heah, Star! Yee-bawee!
 You alluz is a-laggin'—
 30 Mus' be you think I'se dead,
 An' dis de huss you's draggin'—
 You's 'mos' too lazy to draw yo' bref,
 Let 'lone drawin' de waggin.

Dis team—quit bel'rin, sah!
 35 De ladies don't submit 'at—
 Dis team—you ol' fool ox,
 You heah me tell you quit 'at?
 Dis team's des like de 'Nited States!
Dat's what I'se tryin' to git at!

40 De people rides behin',
 De pollytishners haulin'—
 Sh'u'd be a well-bruk ox,
 To foller dat ar callin'—
 An' sometimes nuffin won't do dem steers
 45 But what dey mus' be stallin'!

Woo bahgh! Buck-kannon!* Yes, sah,
 Sometimes dey will be stickin';
 An' den, fus thing dey knows,
 Dey takes a rale good lickin'.
 50 De folks gits down: an' den watch out
 Fur hommerin' an' kickin'.

Dey blows upon dey hands,
 Den flings 'em wid de nails up,

- Jumps up an' cracks dey heels,
 55 An' pruzently dey sails up,
 An' makes dem oxen hump deysef,
 By twistin' all dey tails up!

- In this our age of printer's ink
 'Tis books that show us how to think*—
 60 The rule reversed, and set at naught,
 That held that books were born of thought.
 We form our minds by pedants' rules,
 And all we know is from the schools;
 And when we work, or when we play,
 65 We do it in an ordered way—
 And Nature's self pronounce a ban on,
 Whene'er she dares transgress a canon.
 Untrammeled thus the simple race is
 That "wuks the craps" on cotton places.
 70 Original in act and thought,
 Because unlearned and untaught.
 Observe them at their Christmas party:
 How unrestrained their mirth—how hearty!
 How many things they say and do
 75 That never would occur to you!
 See Brudder Brown—whose saving grace
 Would sanctify a quarter-race—
 Out on the crowded floor advance,
 To "beg a blessin' on dis dance:"

- 80 O Mahsr! let dis gath'rin' fin' a' blessin' in yo'
 sight!
 Don't jedge us hard fur what we does—you knows*
 it's Chrismus night;
 An' all de balance ob de yeah we does as right's we kin.
 Ef dancin's wrong, O Mahsr! let de time excuse de sin!

We labors in de vineya'd, wukin' hard an' wukin'
true;

- 85 Now, shorely you won't notus, ef we eats a grape or two,
An' takes a leetle holiday—a leetle restin' spell—
Bekase, nex' week, we'll start in fresh, an' labor twicet as well.

Remember, Mahsr—min' dis, now—de sinfulness ob sin

Is 'pendin' 'pon de sperrit what we goes an' does it
in:

- 90 An' in a righchis frame ob min' we's gwine to dance
an' sing,
A-feelin' like King David, when he cut de pigeon wing.*

It seems to me—indeed it do—I mebbe mout be wrong—

That people raly ought to dance, when Chrismus comes along;

Des dance bekase dey's happy—like de birds hops
in de trees,

- 95 De pine-top fiddle soundin' to de bowin' ob de breeze.

We has no ark to dance afore, like Isrul's prophet king;

We has no harp to soun' de chords, to help us out to sing;

But 'cordin' to de gif's we has we does de bes' we knows;

An' folks don't 'spise de vi'let flower bekase it ain't de rose.

100 You bless us, please, sah, eben ef we's doin' wrong to-night;
 Kase den we'll need de blessin' more'n ef we's doin'
 right;*
 An' let de blessin' stay wid us, untel we comes to die,
 An' goes to keep our Chrismus wid dem sheriffs* in de sky!

Yes, tell dem preshis anguls we's a-gwine to jine
 'em soon:

105 Our voices we's a-trainin' fur to sing de glory tune;
 We's ready when you wants us, an' it ain't no matter when—
 O Mahsr! call yo' chillen soon, an' take 'em home!
 Amen.

The rev'rend man is scarcely through,
 When all the noise begins anew,
 110 And with such force assaults the ears,
 That through the din one hardly hears
 Old fiddling Josey "sound his A,"*
 Correct the pitch, begin to play,
 Stop, satisfied, then, with the bow,
 115 Rap out the signal dancers know:

Git yo' pardners, fust kwattillion!
Stomp yo' feet, an' raise 'em high;
Tune is: O! dat watermillion!
Gwine to git to home bime bye."
 120 S'lute yo' pardners!—scrape perlitlely—
Don't be bumpin' gin de res'—
Balance all!—now, step out rightly;
Alluz dance yo' lebbel bes'.
Fo'wa'd foah!—whoop up, niggers!
 126 Back ag'in!—don't be so slow!—
Swing cornahs!—min' de figgers!
 When I hollers, den yo' go.

Top ladies cross ober!

- Hol' on, till I takes a dram—
 130 Gemmen solo!—yes, I's sober—
 Cain't say how de fiddle am.
Hands around!—hol' up yo' faces,
 Don't be lookin' at yo' feet!
Swing yo' pardners to yo' places!
 135 Dat's de way—dat's hard to beat.
Sides fo'w'd!—when you's ready—
 Make a bow as low's you kin!
Swing acrost wid opp'site lady!
 Now we'll let you swap ag'in:
 140 Ladies change!—shet up dat talkin';
 Do yo' talkin' arter while!
Right an' lef'!—don't want no walkin'—
 Make yo' steps, an' show yo' style!

- And so the “set” proceeds—its length
 145 Determined by the dancers' strength;
 And all agree to yield the palm
 For grace and skill to “Georgy Sam,”*
 Who stamps so hard, and leaps so high,
 “Des watch him!” is the wond'ring cry—
 150 “De nigger mus' be, fur a fac', Own cousin to a jumpin'-jack!”
 On, on the restless fiddle sounds,
 Still chorused by the curs and hounds;
 Dance after dance succeeding fast,
 155 Till supper is announced at last.
 That scene—but why attempt to show it?
 The most inventive modern poet,
 In fine new words whose hope and trust is,
 Could form no phrase to do it justice!
 160 When supper ends—that is not soon—
 The fiddle strikes the same old tune;
 The dancers pound the floor again,
 With all they have of might and main;
 Old gossips, almost turning pale,

- 165 Attend Aunt Cassy's gruesome tale
 Of conjurers, and ghosts, and devils,
 That in the smokehouse hold their revels ;
 Each drowsy baby droops his head,
 Yet scorns the very thought of bed :
- 170 So wears the night, and wears so fast,
 All wonder when they find it past,
 And hear the signal sound to go
 From what few cocks are left to crow.
 Then, one and all, you hear them shout :
- 175 "Hi ! Booker ! fotch de banjo out,
 An' gib us one song 'fore we goes—
 One ob de berry bes' you knows !"
 Responding to the welcome call,
 He takes the banjo from the wall,
- 180 And tunes the strings with skill and care,
 Then strikes them with a master's air,
 And tells, in melody and rhyme,
 This legend of the olden time :

Go 'way, fiddle ! folks is tired o' hearin' you a-squawkin'.

- 185 Keep silence fur yo' betters !—don't you hear de banjo talkin' ?

About de 'possum's tail she's gwine to lecter—ladies, listen !—

About de ha'r whut isn't dar, an' why de ha'r is missin' :

"Dar's gwine to be a oberflow," said Noah, lookin' solemn—

Fur Noah tuk the Herald,* an' he read de ribber column—

- 190 An' so he sot his hands to wuk a-cl'arin' timber patches,

An' 'lowed he's gwine to build a boat to beat the steamah Natchez.*

Ol' Noah kep' a-nailin' an' a-clippin' an' a-sawin',
 An' all de wicked neighbors kep' a-laughin' an'
 a-pshawin';
 But Noah didn't min' 'em, knowin' whut wuz gwine to happen:
 195 An' forty days an' forty nights de rain it kep'
 a-drappin'.

Now, Noah had done cotched a lot ob ebry sort o' beas'es—
 Ob all de shows a-trabbelin', it beat 'em all to pieces!
 He had a Morgan* colt an' sebral head o' Jarsey cattle—
 An' druv 'em 'board de Ark as soon's he heered de thunder rattle.

200 Den sech anoder fall ob rain!—it come so awful hebby,
 De ribber riz immejitly, an' busted troo de lebbee;
 De people all wuz drowned out—'cep' Noah an' de critters.
 An' men he'd hired to work de boat—an' one to mix de bitters.*

De ark she kep' a-sailin' an' a-sailin' an' a-sail-
 in';
 205 De lion got his dander up, an' like to bruk de palin';
 De sarpints hissed; de painters yelled; tell, whut
 wid all de fussin',
 You c'u'dn't hardly heah de mate a-bossin' 'roun'
 an' cussin'.

Now, Ham, de only nigger whut wuz runnin' on de packet,
 Got lonesome in de barber shop, an' c'u'dn't stan'
 de racket;

²¹⁰ An' so, fur to amuse he-se'f, he steamed some wood an' bent it,
 An' soon he had a banjo made—de fust dat wuz invented.

He wet de ledder, stretched it on; made bridge an'
 screws an' aprin;

An' fitted in a proper neck—'twuz berry long an'
 tap'rin';

He tuk some tin, an' twisted him a thimble fur to ring it;

²¹⁵ An' den de mighty question riz: how wuz he gwine to string it?

De 'possum had as fine a tail as dis dat I's a-sing-
 in';

De ha'r's so long an' thick an' strong—des fit fur banjo-stringin';

Dat nigger shaved 'em off as short as wash-day-
 dinner graces;

An' sorted ob 'em by de size, f'om little E's to basses.

²²⁰ He strung her, tuned her, struck a jig—'twuz
 "Nebber min' de wedder"—

She soun' like forty-lebben bands a-playin' all to-gedder;

Some went to pattin', some to dancin': Noah called de figgers;

An' Ham he sot an' knocked de tune, de happiest ob niggers!

Now, sence dat time—it's mighty strange—dere s not de slightes' showin'

²²⁵ Ob any ha'r at all upon de 'possum's tail a-grow-
 in';

An' curi's, too, dat nigger's ways: his people nebber los' em—
 Fur whar you finds de nigger—dar's de banjo an'
 de 'possum!

The night is spent; and as the day
 Throws up the first faint flash of gray,
 230 The guests pursue their homeward way;
 And through the field beyond the gin,
 Just as the stars are going in,
 See Santa Claus departing—grieving—
 His own dear Land of Cotton leaving.
 235 His work is done; he fain would rest
 Where people know and love him best.
 He pauses, listens, looks about;
 But go he must: his pass is out.
 So, coughing down the rising tears,
 240 He climbs the fence* and disappears.
 And thus observes a colored youth
 (The common sentiment, in sooth):
 "O! what a blessin' 'tw'u'd ha' been,
 Ef Santy had been born a twin!
 245 We'd hab two Chrismuses a yeah—
 Or p'r'aps one brudder'd settle heah!"

SAMUEL MINTURN PECK.

(1854- .)

Samuel Minturn Peck was born near Tuscaloosa, Alabama, and was educated at the State University. After a medical course in New York City, he returned to his native town and has lived there since. He is a writer of very graceful verse, and some of his pieces, I Wonder What Maud Will Say, A Knot of Blue, and Bessie Brown, M.D., have been exceedingly popular.

BESSIE BROWN, M.D.¹

'Twas April when she came to town;
The birds had come, the bees were swarming.
Her name, she said, was Doctor Brown:
I saw at once that she was charming.

⁵ She took a cottage tinted green,
Where dewy roses loved to mingle;
And on the door next day was seen
A dainty little shingle.

Her hair was like an amber wreath;
¹⁰ Her hat was darker, to enhance it.
The violet eyes that glowed beneath
Were brighter than her keenest lancet.
The beauties of her glove and gown
The sweetest rhyme would fail to utter,
¹⁵ Ere she had been a day in town
The town was in a flutter.

The gallants viewed her feet and hands,
And swore they never saw such wee things;
The gossips met in purring bands
²⁰ And tore her piecemeal o'er the tea things.
The former drank the Doctor's health
With clinking cups, the gay carousers;
The latter watched her door by stealth,
Just like so many mousers.

²⁵ But Doctor Bessie went her way
Unmindful of the spiteful cronies,

¹The poems given are used by permission of the author and Frederick A. Stokes Company, Publishers.

And drove her buggy every day
 Behind a dashing pair of ponies.
 Her flower-like face so bright she bore,
 30 I hoped that time might never wilt her.
 The way she tripped across the floor
 Was better than a philter.

Her patients thronged the village street;
 Her snowy slate was always quite full.
 35 Some said her bitters tasted sweet,
 And some pronounced her pills delightful.
 'Twas strange—I knew not what it meant—
 She seemed a nymph from Eldorado;
 Where'er she came, where'er she went,
 40 Grief lost its gloomy shadow.

Like all the rest, I too grew ill;
 My aching heart there was no quelling.
 I tremble at my doctor's bill—
 And lo! the items still are swelling.
 45 The drugs I've drunk you'd weep to hear!
 They've quite enriched the fair concocter,
 And I'm a ruined man, I fear,
 Unless—I wed the Doctor!

THE CAPTAIN'S FEATHER.

The dew is on the heather,
 50 The moon is in the sky,
 And the captain's waving feather
 Proclaims the hour is nigh
 When some upon their horses
 Shall through the battle ride,
 55 And some with bleeding corsers
 Must on the heather bide.

The dust is on the heather,
 The moon is in the sky,
 And about the captain's feather
 60 The bolts of battle fly;
 But hark, what sudden wonder
 Breaks forth upon the gloom?
 It is the cannon's thunder—
 It is the voice of doom!

65 The blood is on the heather,
 The night is in the sky,
 And the gallant captain's feather
 Shall wave no more on high;
 The grave and holy brother
 70 To God is saying mass,
 But who shall tell his mother,
 And who shall tell his lass?

THE GRAPEVINE SWING.

When I was a boy on the old plantation,
 Down by the deep bayou,
 75 The fairest spot of all creation,
 Under the arching blue;
 When the wind came over the cotton and corn,
 To the long slim loop I'd spring
 With brown feet bare, and a hat brim torn,
 80 And swing in the grapevine swing.

Swinging in the grapevine swing,
 Laughing where the wild birds sing,
 I dream and sigh
 For the days gone by,
 85 Swinging in the grapevine swing!

Out—o'er the water lilies bonnie and bright,
 Back—to the moss-grown tree;

I shouted and laughed with a heart as bright
 As a wild rose tossed by the breeze.
 90 The mocking bird joined in my reckless glee,
 I longed for no angel's wing—
 I was just as near heaven as I wanted to be
 Swinging in the grapevine swing.

Swinging in the grapevine swing,
 95 Laughing where the wild birds sing,
 O to be a boy
 With a heart full of joy,
 Swinging in the grapevine swing!

I'm weary at noon, I'm weary at night,
 100 I'm fretted and sore at heart,
 And care is sowing my locks with white
 As I wend through the fevered mart.
 I'm tired of the world, with its pride and pomp,
 And fame seems a worthless thing.
 105 I'd barter it all for one day's romp,
 And a swing in the grapevine swing.

Swinging in the grapevine swing,
 Laughing where the wild birds sing,
 I would I were away
 110 From the world to-day,
 Swinging in the grapevine swing!

PHYLLIS.

The singing of sweet Phyllis
 Like the silver laughing rill is,
 And her breath is like the lily's
 115 In the dawn.

As graceful as the dipping
 Summer swallow or the skipping
 Of a lambkin is her tripping
 O'er the lawn.

120 To whom shall I compare her?
 To a dryad? No. She's rarer.
 She is something—only fairer—
 Like Bo-peep.

She is merry, she is clever;
 125 Surely had Bo-peep been ever
 Half so winsome she had never Lost a sheep.

Her eyes are like the heather,
 Or the skies in April weather;
 130 And as blue as both together
 In the spring.

Alas! I need a meter,
 As I pipe her, that is sweeter,
 And a rhythm that is fleeter
 135 On the wing.

Beyond a poet's fancies,
 Though the muse had kissed his glances,
 Is her dimple when it dances
 In a smile.

140 O the havoc it is making—
 Days of sorrow, nights of waking—
 Half a score of hearts are aching
 All the while!

145 Sweet Phyllis! I adore her,
 And with beating heart implore her
 On my loving knees before her
 In alarm.

'Tis neither kind nor rightful
 That a lassie so delightful
 150 Should exert a spell so frightful
 With her charm.

WILLIAM HAMILTON HAYNE.

(1856- .)

William Hamilton Hayne, son of Paul Hamilton Hayne, was born at Charleston, South Carolina, but early removed with his father to Copse Hill, near Augusta, Georgia. His verse is seen frequently in magazines of the day.

THE YULE LOG.

Out of the mighty Yule log came
 The crooning of the little wood flame,
 A single bar of music fraught
 With cheerful yet half-pensive thought—
 5 A thought elusive, out of reach,
 Yet trembling on the verge of speech.

SLEEP AND HIS BROTHER DEATH.¹

Just ere the darkness is withdrawn,
 In seasons of cold or heat,
 Close to the boundary line of Dawn
 10 These mystical brothers meet.

¹These selections are used with the permission of the author.

They clasp their weird and shadowy hands,
 As they listen each to each;
 But never a mortal understands
 Their strange immortal speech.

FRANK LEBBY STANTON.

(1857- .)

Frank L. Stanton was born at Charleston, South Carolina; and, after receiving a common-school education, learned the printer's trade. After serving on various Georgia papers, he joined the staff of the Atlanta Constitution, and through its columns has gained a wide fame. Among his numerous volumes, perhaps his best-known ones are Comes One with a Song (1898), Songs from Dixie Land (1900), Up from Georgia (1902), and Little Folks Down South (1904). The sentiment, music, humbleness of theme, and clearness of his verse have made it exceedingly popular. He has been called the most prolific writer of verse in the world.

COMES ONE WITH A SONG.¹

In the strife and the tumult that sweeps us along
 Comes one with a song.
 In the storm of the nations—the wrath for the wrong—
 Comes one with a song.

¹These selections are used with the permission of the author.

5 And over the rage of the people the skies
 See the light of a lovelier morning arise;
 There are prayers on Love's lips, and the light's in Love's eyes:
 Comes one with a song.

10 In the rude clamor and crush of the throng
 Comes one with a song.
 The winds have foretold him; rills rippled along
 Of one with a song.
 And the sword's in the scabbard, and soft as the dew
 On the lips of the lilies—God's white thoughts of you—
 15 Love's dear arms enfold you; light breaks from the blue!
 Comes one with a song.

LIGHT ON THE HILLS.

Dying, they lifted his curly head,
 And he looked to the east, and smiling said:
 "It's light on the hills!"
 20 And he went away, in the morning bright
 With that last, sweet, quivering word of "Light"
 On the lips Death kissed to a silence long. . . .
 So ends the sighing, and so ends the song.

And I think that Death, with his icy breath,
 25 Was kind to him; and I'm friend with Death
 For that light on the hills!
 Back of it—back of it glooms the Night,
 Dark and lonely; but all was light
 When his lips were laid in the silence long. . . .
 30 So ends the sighing, and so ends the song.

If I remember his brief, bright years
 With the pang at the heart—with the falling of tears.

There is light on the hills!

But he sleeps beneath, and the light's above,
 35 And something is lost to the world in love.
 And heaven knows this; but it does no wrong. . . .
 So ends the sighing, and so ends the song.

“There is light on the hills.” So we sing, so we say,

When God sends His angel to kiss it away—
 40 There is light on the hills!
 And we kneel in the darkness and say that we trust.

When heaven's not as dear as our love in the dust!—

As the love that it reaps—that it keeps from us long. . . .

So ends the sighing, and so ends the song.

HENRY JEROME STOCKARD.

(1858- .)

Henry J. Stockard was born in Cheatham County, North Carolina, and was educated at the State University. He has held various professorships in colleges of North Carolina, and is now a professor in Peace Institute, Raleigh. A volume of his verse, Fugitive Lines, appeared in 1897.

HOMER.¹

- That conjuring name doth change the centuries,
 And the enchanted pagan world restore!
 Old Triton* and the Nereids* sport before
 Poseidon's* chariot storming down the seas.
- ⁵ Pan* blows his mellow reed, and to the breeze
 The nautilus unfurls his sail once more;
 While silver voices wake the waters o'er
 'Mid asphodels on Anthemusia's leas.
- I hear the Odyssey and Iliad rise
- ¹⁰ With deeper rhythm than that of Chios' surge,
 And there upon the blue Ægean's verge,
 Unchanging while the centuries increase,
 After three thousand years before me lies
 The unveiled shore of old sea-cinctured Greece!

YATES SNOWDEN.

(1858- .)

Yates Snowden was born at Charleston, South Carolina, and was educated at the College of Charleston. After his graduation, in 1879, he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1882; but he has practiced the profession but little. Mr. Snowden was for some time on the staff of The News and Courier, of Charleston; but in 1904 was appointed professor of history in South Carolina College, now the University of South Carolina, and has since been occupied with this work.

¹From Fugitive Lines. By permission of the author and G. P. Putnam's Sons.

A CAROLINA BOURBON.¹

W. M. P. (1812-1902).

Ridiculous to some may seem
This relic of the old régime,
So rudely wakened from his dream
Of high ambition.

- ⁵ A heart of nature's noblest mold,
By honor tempered and controlled—
O look not in a soul so bold
For mock contrition.

- For when the die of war was cast,
¹⁰ And through the land the bugle blast
Called all to arms from first to last,
For Carolina—
Careless of what might be his fate,
He gave his all to save the State;
¹⁵ He thought, thinks now (strange to relate),
No cause diviner.

- Of name and lineage proud, he bore
The character 'mongst rich and poor
Which marks now, as in days of yore,
²⁰ The Huguenot.
Two hundred slaves were in his train,
Six thousand acres broad domain.
(His ancestors in fair Touraine
Had no such lot.)

- ²⁵ He loved and wooed in early days;
She died—and he her memory pays
The highest tribute—for, with ways
And views extreme,

¹By permission of the author.

He, 'gainst stern facts and common sense,
 30 To the whole sex (to all intents)
 Transferred the love and reverence
 Of life's young dream.

Perhaps too easy life he led—
 Four hours afield and ten abed;
 35 His other time he talked and read,
 Or else made merry
 With many a planter friend to dine,
 His health to drink in rare old wine—
 Madeira, which thrice crossed the line,
 40 And gold-leaf Sherry.

And here was mooted many a day
 The question on which each gourmet
 Throughout the Parish had his say:
 "Which is the best,
 45 Santee or Cooper River bream?"
 Alas! the evening star grew dim,
 Ere any guest agreed with him,
 Or he with guest.

.

The war rolled on; and many a friend
 50 And kinsman, whom he helped to send Their homes and country to defend,
 Home ne'er returned.
 What harder lot could now befall?
 Threats could not bend nor woes appall;
 55 Unmoved, he saw his Fathers' hall
 To ashes burned.

And now to live within his means,
 He dons his gray Kentucky jeans.
 (His dress, in other times and scenes,
 60 Was drap d'été.*)

His hat is much the worse for wear ;
 His shoes revamped from year to year,
 For "calfskin boots are all too dear,"
 We hear him say.

65 So life drags on as in a trance,
 No émigré of stricken France,
 No Jacobite of old romance
 Of sterner mold.

His fortune gone, his rights denied ;
 70 For him the Federal Union died
 When o'er Virginia's line the tide
 Of battle rolled.

.

*Loyal je serai durant ma vie,

So runs his motto. What cares he

75 For the flag that flies from sea to sea
 And tops the world?

Within the silence of his gates

Death's welcome shadow he awaits,

Still true to those Confederate States

80 Whose flag is furled.

DANSKE DANDRIDGE.

(1859- .)

Danske Dandridge was born at Copenhagen, Denmark, her father being at the time United States minister to that country. In 1877 she married Stephen Dandridge, of Shepherdstown, West Virginia. Her first volume, Joy and Other Poems, appeared in 1888.

THE DEAD MOON.¹

We are ghost-ridden:
 Through the deep night
 Wanders a spirit,
 Noiseless and white.

⁵ Loiters not, lingers not, knoweth not rest;
 Ceaselessly haunting the East and the West.

She, whose undoing the ages have wrought,
 Moves on to the time of God's rhythmical thought.

In the dark, swinging sea,
¹⁰ As she speedeth through space,
 She reads her pale image;
 The wounds are agape on her face.

She sees her grim nakedness
 Pierced by the eyes
¹⁵ Of the Spirits of God
 In their flight through the skies.

(Her wounds, they are many and hollow.)

The Earth turns and wheels as she flies.
 And this Specter, this Ancient, must follow.

²⁰ When, in the æons,
 Had she beginning?
 What is her story?
 What was her sinning?
 Do the ranks of the Holy Ones
²⁵ Know of her crime?
 Does it loom in the mists
 Of the birthplace of Time?
 The stars, do they speak of her
 Under their breath,

¹These selections are used by permission of the author.

30 "Will this Wraith be forever
Thus restless in death?"
On, through immensity,
Sliding and stealing,
35 On, through infinity,
Nothing revealing.

I see the fond lovers;
They walk in her light;
They charge the "soft maiden"
To bless their love-plaint.
40 Does she laugh in her place,
As she glideth through space?
Does she laugh in her orbit with never a sound?
That to her, a dead body,
With nothing but rents in her round—
45 Blighted and marred,
Wrinkled and scarred,
Barren and cold,
Wizened and old—
That to her should be told,
50 That to her should be sung
The yearning and burning of them that are young?

Our Earth that is young,
That is throbbing with life,
Has fiery upheavals,
55 Has boisterous strife;
But she that is dead has no stir, breathes no air;
She is calm, she is voiceless, in lonely despair.
We dart through the void;
We have cries, we have laughter;
60 The phantom that haunts us
Comes silently after.
This Ghost-lady follows,
Though none hear her tread;

On, on, we are flying,
 65 Still tracked by our Dead—
 By this white, awful Mystery,
 Haggard and dead.

THE SPIRIT AND THE WOOD SPARROW.

'Twas long ago:
 The place was very fair;
 70 And from a cloud of snow
 A spirit of the air
 Dropped to the earth below.
 It was a spot by man untrod;
 Just where,
 75 I think, is only known to God.
 The spirit for a while,
 Because of beauty freshly made,
 Could only smile;
 Then grew the smiling to a song,
 80 And as he sang he played
 Upon a moonbeam-wired cithole
 Shaped like a soul.

There was no ear
 Or far or near,
 85 Save one small sparrow of the wood,
 That song to hear.
 This, in a bosky tree,
 Heard all, and understood
 As much as a small sparrow could 90 By sympathy.
 'Twas a fair sight
 That morn of Spring
 When on the lonely height
 The spirit paused to sing.
 95 Then through the air took flight,
 Still liling on the wing.

And the shy bird,
 Who all had heard,
 Straightway began
 100 To practice o'er the lovely strain;
 Again, again;
 Though indistinct and blurred,
 He tried each word,
 Until he caught the last far sounds that fell 105 Like the faint tinkles of a fairy bell.

Now when I hear that song,
 Which has no earthly tone,
 My soul is carried with the strain along
 To the everlasting Throne:
 110 To bow in thankfulness and prayer,
 And gain fresh faith, and love, and patience there.

BENJAMIN SLEDD.

(1864- .)

Benjamin Sledd was born in Bedford County, Virginia, and was educated at Washington and Lee and at Johns Hopkins. He is now professor of English in Wake Forest College, North Carolina. Among his works are two volumes of poetry—From Cliff and Scour (1897) and The Watchers of the Hearth (1901).

THE CHILDREN.¹

No more of work! Yet ere I seek my bed,
 Noiseless into the children's room I go,
 With its four little couches all a-row,
 And bend a moment over each dear head.

¹By permission of the author and Richard J. Badger & Co.

⁵ Those soft, round arms upon the pillow spread,
 Those dreaming lips babbling more than we know,
 One tearful, smothered sigh of baby woe—
 Fond dream of chiding, would they were unsaid!

And while on each moist brow a kiss I lay,
¹⁰ With tremulous rapture grown almost to pain,
 Close at my side I hear a whispered name:
 Our long-lost babe, who with the dawning came,
 And in the midnight went from us again.
 And with bowed head, one good-night more I say.

MADISON CAWEIN.

(1865- .)

Madison Cawein was born at Louisville, Kentucky, and was in business there for some years. He is a most zealous writer and a poet of no small power. Such volumes as Triumph of Music, Lyrics and Idylls, Red Leaves and Roses, and The Vale of Tempe are of high excellence. He is capable of much vivacity and fancy, and yet there is oftentimes a tone of deep earnestness in his work.

THE WHIPPOORWILL.¹

Above long woodland ways that led
 To dells the stealthy twilights tread
 The west was hot geranium-red;
 And still, and still,

¹Used by permission of the author and publishers, G. P. Putnam's Sons.

5 Along old lanes, the locusts sow
 With clustered curls the May times know,
 Out of the crimson afterglow,
 We heard the homeward cattle low,
 And then the far-off, far-off woe
 10 Of "whippoorwill!" of "whippoorwill!"

Beneath the idle beechen boughs
 We heard the cow-bells of the cows
 Come slowly jangling toward the house;
 And still, and still,
 15 Beyond the light that would not die
 Out of the scarlet-haunted sky,
 Beyond the evening star's white eye
 Of glittering chalcedony,
 Drained out of dusk the plaintive cry
 20 Of "whippoorwill!" of "whippoorwill!"

What is there in the moon, that swims
 A naked bosom o'er the limbs,
 That all the wood with magic dims?
 While still, while still,
 25 Among the trees whose shadows grope
 'Mid ferns and flow'rs the dewdrops ope—
 Lost in faint deeps of heliotrope
 Above the clover-scented slope—
 Retreats, despairing past all hope,
 30 The whippoorwill, the whippoorwill.

DISENCHANTMENT OF DEATH.

Hush! She is dead! Tread gently as the light
 Foots dim the weary room. Thou shalt behold.
 Look: In death's ermine pomp of awful white,
 Pale passion of pulseless slumber virgin cold:
 35 Bold, beautiful youth proud as heroic Might—
 Death! and how death hath made it vastly old.

Old earth she is now: energy of birth
 Glad wings hath fledged and tried them suddenly;

The eyes that held have freed their narrow mirth;
 40 Their sparks of spirit, which made this to be,
 Shine fixed in rarer jewels not of earth,
 Far Fairylands beyond some silent sea.

A sod is this whence what were once those eyes
 Will grow blue wild-flowers in what happy air;
 45 Some weed with flossy blossoms will surprise,
 Haply, what summer with her affluent hair;
 Blush-roses bask those cheeks; and the wise skies
 Will know her dryad to what young oak fair.

The chastity of death hath touched her so,
 50 No dreams of life can reach her in such rest;
 No dreams the mind exhausted here below,
 Sleep built within the romance of her breast.
 How she will sleep! like music quickening slow
 Dark the dead germs, to golden life caressed.

55 Low music, thin as winds that lyre the grass, Smiting through red roots harpings; and the sound
 Of elfin revels when the wild dews glass
 Globes of concentric beauty on the ground;
 For showery clouds o'er tepid nights that pass 60 The prayer in harebells and faint foxgloves crowned.

So, if she's dead, thou know'st she is not dead.
 Disturb her not; she lies so lost in sleep:
 The too-contracted soul its shell hath fled:
 Her presence drifts about us and the deep
 65 Is yet unvoyaged and she smiles o'erhead:
 Weep not nor sigh—thou wouldst not have her weep?*

To principles of passion and of pride,
 To trophied circumstance and specious law,
 Stale saws of life, with scorn now flung aside,
 70 From Mercy's throne and Justice would'st thou draw
 Her, Hope in Hope, and Chastity's pale bride,
 In holiest love of holy, without flaw?

The anguish of the living merciless—
 Mad, bitter cruelty unto the grave—
 75 Wrings the dear dead with tenfold heart's distress,
 Earth chaining love, bound by the lips that rave.
 If thou hast sorrow, let thy sorrow bless
 That power of death, of death our selfless slave.

"Unjust?" He is not! for hast thou not all,
 80 All that thou ever hadst* when this dull clay
 So heartless, blasted now, flushed spiritual,
 A restless vassal of Earth's night and day?
 This hath been thine and is; the cosmic call
 Hath disenchanting that which might not stay.

85 Thou unjust!—bar not from its high estate—
 Won with what toil through devastating cares,
 What bootless battling with the violent Fate,
 What mailed endeavor with resistless years—
 That soul: whole-hearted granted once thy mate,
 90 Heaven only loaned, return it not with tears.

LOVE AND A DAY.¹

In girandoles of gladioles
 The day had kindled flame;
 And Heaven a door of gold and pearl
 Unclosed when Morning—like a girl,

¹Copyright, 1901, by Madison J. Cawein. From Weeds by the Wall, 1901.

- 95 A red rose twisted in a curl—
 Down sapphire stairways came.
 Said I to Love: "What must I do?
 What shall I do? What can I do?"
 Said I to Love: "What must I do?"
 100 All on a summer's morning."
- Said Love to me: "Go woo, go woo."
 Said Love to me: "Go woo.
 If she be milking, follow, O!
 And in the clover hollow, O!"
 105 While through the dew the bells clang clear,
 Just whisper it into her ear,
 All on a summer's morning."

LIZETTE WOODWORTH REESE.

(1856- .)

Lizette Woodworth Reese was born at Waverly, Maryland, but has lived most of her life at Baltimore. Her collected poems, A Branch of May, appeared in 1887, and received flattering notices.

IN SORROW'S HOUR.¹

- The brambles* blow without you—at the door
 They make late April—and the brier too
 Buds its first rose for other folk than you;
 In the deep grass the elder bush once more
 5 Heaps its sweet snow; and the marsh-marigold
 With its small fire sets all the sedge aflame;

¹By permission of Messrs. Morris & Hinkley, Baltimore, administrators of Cushings & Bailey, Publishers.

Like flakes of flame blown down the gray, still air,
 The cardinal flower is out in thickets old.
 O, love! O, love! what road is yours to-day?
 10 For I would follow after, see your face,
 Put my hand in your hand, feel the dear grace
 Of hair, mouth, eyes, hear the brave words you say.
 The dark is void, and all the daylight vain.
 O that you were but here with me again!

WALTER MALONE.

(1866- .)

Judge Malone was born in De Soto County, Mississippi. After graduating at the University of Mississippi, in 1887, he went to Memphis, Tennessee, to take up the practice of law, and has resided there since, with the exception of three years (1897-1900) spent in literary work in New York. Among his numerous work are The Outcast and Other Poems (1885), Songs of Dusk and Dawn (1894), Songs of North and South (1900), and Poems (1904).

A PORTRAIT OF HENRY TIMROD.¹

Strange eyes gaze sadly from that weary face,
 Beneath a brow that shows the seal of care;
 Defeat and Disappointment leave their trace
 Upon the youthful visage pictured there.

¹By permission of the author.

⁵ The same old story here is handed down—
The true-born poet and the same old doom—
The bard who starves while rhymesters wear the crown,
Who finds his throne erected in a tomb.

Gone are the glories of your halcyon days,
¹⁰ Gone are the heroes whom you sung of yore;
Their banners in the skies no longer blaze,
Their fervent shouts are stilled for evermore.

No more their white steeds paw the bloody field,
No more their trumpets rouse the raptured soul,
¹⁵ No more their ranks in fiery fight are wheeled,
No more their drums like sullen thunders roll.

Yet as I view your old-time picture, all
The proud past blossoms, though your day has fled;

Once more I hear your Stuart's battle-call,
²⁰ And see your Stonewall rising from the dead.

I see their blazoned banners float like fire,
I hear their shouts sweep down the perished years;

I hear once more the throbbing of your lyre,
Ecstatic with a nation's hopes and fears.

²⁵ And foes with friends now come to honor you,
O poet, free from blemish and from blame;
A wreath is yours as long as men are true,
As long as Courage wins the crown of Fame!

NOTES.

R. RICH, GENT.

These specimens from Newes from Virginia are given, not because of any poetic merit, but simply to show the general spirit of the times, the character of the first colonists, the hardships that they suffered, and the hopes that were theirs.

Line 3: "Report doth lye." It was believed in both Great Britain and America that Gates and Newport had been lost at sea.

Line 24: "Wee hope." This line has something of the character of a prophecy. It expresses an idea greater than its writer realized.

JOHN SMITH.

"Advertisement." The word formerly had a meaning akin to our word "advice" or "explanation."

GEORGE SANDYS.

OID.—A Roman poet (43 B.C.-18 A.D.), whose Metamorphoses, a poem in fifteen books, tells the story of many wonderful changes of human beings into animals, trees, etc.

GEORGE ALSOP.

PURPLE CAP.—Such a cap was sometimes placed upon the dead.

Line 13: "Noll." A popular seventeenth-century abbreviation of "Oliver."

Line 14: "Westminster." Cromwell's head was exposed in Westminster Hall, London.

Line 19: "Three-pile." A heavy, expensive velvet.

BACON'S EPITATH.

Line 2: "Spleen." A word formerly used for "anger" or "jealousy."

Line 21: "Mars." The Roman god of war, son of Jupiter and Juno.

Line 21: "Minerva." The goddess of arts and sciences, said to have sprung from the head of Jupiter. The Parthenon was her temple.

Line 22: "Whose pen and sword alike." Contemporary accounts show Bacon to have been not only a brave leader, but a man of brilliant intellect as well. Born at Suffolk, England, in 1647, and educated in London, he came to Virginia in 1673, quickly gained rank as a lawyer, and soon became a member of Sir William Berkeley's council. In 1675 the colonists chose him, against the wishes of Berkeley, as leader of the forces sent to subdue the Indians, and in 1676 Berkeley declared him a rebel. Bacon entered Jamestown, with his troops, and forced the governor to give him the commission. A number of conflicts ensued; but Bacon, by means of his shrewdness and versatility, always came forth victor. He died, probably from the effects of poison, October 1, 1676.

Line 23: "Cato." A Roman patriot (234 B.C.-149 B.C.), noted as writer, orator, statesman, and soldier.

Line 35: "Whether to Cæsar." A reference to the accusation against Jesus, that he was Cæsar's enemy.

EBENEZER COOK.

Line 9: "A pious, conscientious rogue." The feeling was then very bitter against the Quakers, and this line probably struck a popular chord.

Line 11: "Swore." It is against the creed of the Quaker to swear to a statement. He holds to the biblical command to let the answer be simply "yea" or "nay."

Line 14: "Light within." The Quaker is guided by inner light, or conscience, rather than by theological dogma.

Line 17: "Ten thousand weight." Very little money was used in early American commerce. In the South tobacco was the basis of valuation.

Line 19: "Oronooka." A fine brand of tobacco.

VIRGINIA HEARTS OF OAK.

Line 3: "Than America copies." This was literally true. When hostilities first began, it was not the intention of the American colonies to separate from England, and many Americans opposed the idea until the very close of the war.

Line 11: "Magna Charta." The English bill of rights (1215) by which many privileges were gained by the common people.

Notice the brave and hearty swing of this poem. The form of expression agrees with the sentiment of the song.

HUGH HENRY BRACKENRIDGE.

WARREN.—An American statesman and general (1741-1775), killed at the Battle of Bunker Hill. A statue of him stands there to-day.

Line 10: "Brutus." This may very well be applied to either Lucius Junius Brutus (500 B.C.) or Marcus Junius Brutus (84 B.C.-42 B.C.). Lucius drove the king from Rome and established a republic; Marcus endeavored to preserve its freedom, and for that purpose became one of the assassins of Julius Cæsar.

Line 10: "Hampden." A British patriot (1594-1643), who opposed the tyranny of Charles I. and fought in Cromwell's army.

Line 10: "Sidney." A British patriot (1622-1683), who opposed Charles I. and aided Cromwell until the latter began to assume great power. He then opposed Cromwell and was an exile for many years, but was pardoned by Charles II. His political enemies connected him with the Rye House Plot, and caused his execution.

Line 20: "Amaranth." A flower that preserves its freshness for a long time after being cut; hence an emblem of immortality.

GENERAL MONTGOMERY.—An American general (1736-1775), who captured Montreal and was killed in the attempt to take Quebec. His remains lie buried under the monument in front of St. Paul's Church, New York.

Line 27: "Cyclops." Mythological giants, each having but one eye. They helped Vulcan in making armor.

Line 28: "Saracen." Followers of Mohammed. They were considered exceedingly cruel and bloodthirsty.

Line 29: "Mogul." A member of the Mongolian race.

Line 29: "Tartar." A member of an Asiatic tribe which was powerful during the Middle Ages.

Line 37: "That was an Englishman." The purpose of Brackenridge's plays was to arouse the fighting spirit in the American people, and hence we find the emotions rather exaggerated. It must be remembered that some of the prosperous merchants of Boston and New York and some of the ancient families of Virginia gave all the plans for war a very cool reception.

WILLIAM MUNFORD.

ILIAD.—The famous epic by the Greek poet, Homer (10th century, B.C.). It describes the siege of Troy by the Greeks.

HECTOR.—The greatest warrior among the Trojans. He was killed by Achilles and his body dragged through the Greek camps.

Line 2: "Troy." An ancient city of Asia Minor, destroyed by the Greeks.

Line 5: "Jove." Jupiter, the chief god in classical mythology.

Line 17: "Saturnian." Saturn, Jove's predecessor, was believed to have founded civilization and agriculture in Italy. He is sometimes represented as Time, holding a scythe.

JOHN SHAW.

Line 12. Notice in the first twelve lines the slightly exaggerated descriptions of beautiful features and characteristics: "coral hue," "pearly treasures," "morning of thine eye," bosom's "snows," etc. This tendency is found in nearly all love lyrics. Compare with this poem Annie Laurie, some poems of Robert Burns, Pinkney's A Health and A Serenade, Poe's To One in Paradise, and Samuel Minturn Peck's Phyllis and A Southern Girl.

WASHINGTON ALLSTON.

Line 10: "That veils thy throne." Notice here, as elsewhere, evidences of the artistic sense of the poet. He sees the light with an artist's eye. This is shown also in line 12 in the words "a blot in space."

S. T. COLERIDGE.—Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772-1834), one of the most famous essayists and poets in English literature. His best poem is The Ancient Mariner. Coleridge and Allston met in Italy and became close friends.

Line 16: "Thy gentle voice." Coleridge was one of the most brilliant talkers of the nineteenth century.

WILLIAM MAXWELL.

Line 7: "Phoenix." The never-dying bird of mythology. At the close of every hundredth year of its existence it was consumed in a fire enkindled by the rays of the sun, and was recreated immediately, with all the strength and beauty of youth. The bird was believed to live almost entirely alone.

Line 11: "Venus." A very brilliant planet, sometimes occupying a place as the Evening Star. It derives its name from that of the Roman goddess of love.

RICHARD DABNEY.

EPIGRAM.—A brief, concise, pithy statement.

ARCHIAS.—A Greek poet known to modern times through Cicero's famous oration, Pro Archia Poeta.

Line 22: "Lucifer." The Morning Star. The word comes from the Latin and means "light-bearer."

Line 34: "Hesperus." A name given to the Evening Star by the Greeks.

RICHARD HENRY WILDE.

Line 8: "But none shall weep." The last line of each stanza possibly constitutes a weakness in this poem. To many readers of to-day these words have a slight strain of insincerity and sentimentality.

Line 29: "Yorick." The court fool whose skull was dug up by the gravediggers, in Hamlet. "Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy."

Line 32: "Abbot of Misrule." A master of Christmas festivals who absolved all his followers of their wisdom and reason.

Line 36: "Jaques." A melancholy, cynical character in Shakespeare's As You Like It.

A FAREWELL TO AMERICA.—This poem refers to Wilde's departure for Italy (1834).

Line 39: "More than fatherland." It should be remembered that the poet was a native of Ireland.

Line 55: "It may be years." He was abroad about four years (1835-1840).

MIRABEAU BONAPARTE LAMAR.

THE DAUGHTER OF MENDOZA.—This poem is said to have been written in honor of a beautiful woman in Argentine Republic. The Mendoza is a river in that country.

EDWARD COATE PINKNEY.

A HEALTH.—This poem was composed in honor of a very close friend of Pinkney's, Mrs. Rebecca Somerville, of Baltimore. Notice the use of beautiful consonant and vowel combinations. Compare it with Ben Jonson's Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes.

Line 49: "Afghaun." A native of Afghanistan. The people are Mohanmedans, but still retain many pagan ideas.

A SERENADE.—This was written in honor of Miss McCausland, whom Pinkney married in 1824.

GEORGE DENISON PRENTICE.

Line 12: "Worshipped his own loved sun." The ancient Persians were sun worshippers.

THE CLOSING YEAR.—Compare this poem with Bryant's Thanatopsis and The Flood of Years, Young's Night Thoughts, and Wordsworth's The Excursion. Note carefully the similarities and contrasts in their sentiment and structure.

Line 69: "Glass and scythe." This refers to the familiar representation of Time as an old man carrying an hourglass and a scythe.

Line 94: "Pleiad." Seven stars are believed to have composed the Pleiades, but one has been lost in space. Compare the poem with William Gilmore Simms's The Lost Pleiad.

WILLIAM GILMORE SIMMS.

THE GRAPEVINE SWING.—This swing was at Simms's home, "Woodlands." "The vine had drooped its festoons, one below another, in such a way that half a dozen persons . . . could find a comfortable seat, and yet not one of them be sitting on a level with his neighbor." (W. P. Trent, Life of William Gilmore Simms.)

Line 43: "Of Chaldea." The Chaldean shepherd is here identified with the Magi, who were astrologers.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

Line 5: "Giddy stars." "Giddy" here means not foolish but bewildered or dizzy.

Line 12: "Levin." Lightning.

Line 26: "Houri." According to the Moslem teachings, beautiful women, known as Houris, are given to the faithful after death.

Line 51. Compare this with the closing lines of Shelley's Skylark.

THE BELLS.—This poem appeared in its final form in Sartain's Union Magazine December, 1849. The periodical gives some portions of the original draft, and from them we may judge how carefully Poe revised the lines and how great an improvement he wrought. We quote one stanza:

"The bells!—ah, the bells!
 The heavy iron bells!
 Hear the tolling of the bells!
 Hear the bells!
 How horrible a monody there floats
 From their throats—
 From their deep-toned throats!
 How I shudder at the notes
 From the melancholy throats
 Of the bells, bells, bells!
 Of the bells!"

Line 61: "Runic rhyme." The expression here means a mystic rhyme, because of the unknown meaning of the ancient Runic writings. Notice throughout the poem the effects of the vowel and consonant repetitions.

ANNABEL LEE.—Stedman, the American critic, says: "The refrain and measure of this lyric suggest a reversion, in the music-haunted brain of its author, to the songs and melodies that, whether primitive or caught up, are favorites with the colored race, and that must have been familiar to the poet during his childhood in the South." The poem is an expression of Poe's love for his wife.

Line 202: "I lie down." In the stormiest weather Poe lingered longest by his wife's grave.

THE RAVEN.—This poem received wide notice upon its publication in the New York Evening Mirror in January, 1845. The editor, N. P. Willis, spoke of it as "unsurpassed in English poetry for subtle conception, masterly ingenuity, of versification, and consistent sustaining of imaginative lift." It became widely known in England and made a strong impression upon every reader there. According to Mrs. Browning, one lady took down her bust of Pallas, declaring that, after reading this poem, she could not bear the sight of the figure.

Line 242: "Flirt and flutter." Poe states that for the purpose of making the latter part of the poem a striking contrast, he made the approach of the bird as near "to the ludicrous as was admissible."

Line 243: "A stately Raven." Poe told a friend that an owl did come into his room in this manner; but that, in writing the poem, he chose the raven as being more poetic.

Line 246: "Pallas." The goddess of arts and sciences, often called Minerva. It will be noticed that the lover is here a student.

Line 252: "Plutonian." Pluto was the god of the dark underworld.

Line 287: "Nepenthe." A drink given by the gods for the purpose of banishing sorrow.

Line 294: "Balm in Gilead." See Jeremiah viii. 22.

Line 298: "Aidenn." The Garden of Eden, but here representing the Future.

THE CONQUEROR WORM.—It is doubtful whether in all literature there is a poem more filled with horror and despair. It contains not one hopeful word.

Line 344: "Theater." The world.

Line 345: "Play." Human life.

Line 348: "Mimes." The mimes represent men, who are considered by Poe as mere toys of circumstance.

Line 358: "Phantom." The phantom is complete happiness, which, of course, none obtain on this earth.

ALBERT PIKE.

Line 12: "Glad scorner of all cities." The mocking bird is a very shy creature, and prefers secluded places for its home.

Line 23: "Æolian." Æolus was the god of the winds; hence the æolian harp is one played by the winds.

Line 34: "I cannot love." Compare this sentence with the closing lines of Coleridge's Ancient Mariner. Compare the entire poem with Keats's Ode to a Nightingale.

Line 88: "Red autumn." Notice the appropriateness of the descriptive words here and in line 90 also.

Line 106: "Crescent Diana." Diana was the goddess of hunting and represented the moon.

ALEXANDER BEAUFORT MEEK.

Line 19: "Helvyn." Switzerland.

Line 19: "Tempe." A valley in Thessaly, where victors in the ancient games were crowned.

Line 33: "Heaven's best gift to man." This is inaccurately quoted from Milton's Paradise Lost, v. 18: "Heaven's last best gift."

Line 70: "Petrarch." The great Italian poet (1304-1374), whose sonnets to his mistress, Laura, are among the most famous poems in all literature.

Line 77: "Anacreon." A Greek poet (561 B.C.), who wrote many lyrics on love.

Line 79: "Bird of music." Lines 79-82 have often been quoted because of their happily worded description.

PHILIP PENDLETON COOKE.

FLORENCE VANE.—The poem was published in the Gentleman's Magazine while Poe was editor (1839-1840). Poe was very much an admirer of Cooke's work.

Line 13: "Elysian." Elysium was the mythological home of the blest.

Line 22: "Without a main." The idea is a heart without a resting place, without stability.

Compare this poem with Browning's The Last Ride Together and Landor's Rose Aylmer.

SEVERN TEACKLE WALLIS.

THE BLESSED HAND.—This poem was written to be sold at the Southern Relief Fair, held at Baltimore shortly after the Civil War. The proceeds, amounting to about $165,000, were expended in reestablishing the ruined homes of the South. Printed copies of The Blessed Hand were sold and brought in no small share of the total amount. The poem is based on a legend that an English monk at the monastery of Aremberg spent his life beautifying books, and that when his tomb was opened long after his death, his right hand was found preserved from all decay.

Line 14: "Matin song." Matin, according to the Roman Catholic order of worship, is the early morning hour for prayer.

Line 20: "Missals." An ancient book containing the church service.

Line 28: "Vesper chime." Vesper is the evening hour of prayer. The chimes of nearly all European churches are rung at this time.

AMELIA WELBY.

Line 8: "And held it trembling there." The last four lines of this poem, because of their happy description, were formerly often quoted.

Line 10: "Sad moan." This refers to the sound always heard when a shell is placed against the ear.

THEODORE O'HARA.

Line 36: "Serried foe." The Mexicans, under General Santa Anna, numbered 21,000; while the Americans, under General Zachary Taylor, numbered but 4,769.

Line 41: "Long has the doubtful conflict raged." The battle lasted more than ten hours, and the losses on both sides were exceedingly heavy.

Line 47: "Stout old chieftain." Taylor, who had been in command of Kentuckians during the War of 1812, was the idol of his men, and doubtless deserved their admiration.

Line 58: "Angostura." The word means "the narrows," and is the name of a pass near the battlefield.

Line 65: "Dark and Bloody Ground." This is the meaning of the Indian word "Kentucky."

Line 75: "Spartan mother's breast." According to the Greek story, the Spartan mother handed the shield to her son with these words: "Come back with this or upon this."

PLANTATION MELODIES.

MOURNER'S SONG.—This little lyric gives some conception of the religion and "theology" of the ante-bellum negro. Like all primitive races, he made more of God's might and destructive powers than of God's love.

ROLL, JORDAN, ROLL.—This song and Swing Low, Sweet Chariot were probably the most popular of ante-bellum negro hymns. The tunes are weird, but exceedingly melodious.

Line 18: "Youah days be long." See Psalm xxi. 4; xxxiv. 11; xci. 16; Proverbs iii. 1; ix. 11; x. 27.

Line 25: "Histe de window." In order to give vent to the emotions, such side remarks are very often used in negro melodies. Ejuculations fulfilling much the same purpose are sometimes found in the Psalms.

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.—See Psalm lxviii. 17; Isaiah lxvi. 15; Revelation ix. 9.

Line 57: "Silvah spade," "gol'en chain," etc. Descriptions of vast wealth, rich ornaments, and luxurious surroundings are very common in these old hymns. It is a significant fact that the Psalms—themselves rich in such descriptions—were the favorite portion of the Scriptures among the earlier negroes.

LAY DIS BODY DOWN.—In these crude lines one finds a suggestion of the course of life: conscious existence—"I knows moon-rise, I knows star-rise;" death—"I walks in de graveyard, I walks troo de graveyard;" resurrection—"I goes to de judgment in de evenin' of de day;" and heaven—

"An' my soul and youah soul will meet in de day
When I lays dis body down."

CIVIL WAR SONGS.

These specimens are given not because of poetic merit but to show the spirit of the time. However crude they may appear, they were well suited for the singers around the camp fire.

Line 3: "Lice of Egypt." See Exodus viii. 16; Psalm cv. 31.

Line 9: "Old Kentucky is caved from under." Kentucky was restrained from giving much aid to the Confederacy because of the early arrival of Union troops on her soil.

Line 10: "Tennessee is split asunder." The larger portion of East and Middle Tennessee did not wish to secede. In these sections families divided, and brother fought brother.

Line 13: "Old John Brown is dead and gone." John Brown had been executed for attempting to raise an insurrection among the slaves.

Line 14: "His spirit." This refers sarcastically to a popular Union song about John Brown, containing the words: "His soul goes marching on."

Line 16: "An ape's from Illinois." The words refer to Abraham Lincoln.

Line 17. The sentiments expressed in this line and the following ten or twelve show the general feeling of the times. No one thought that the war would last any length of time or be anything serious.

THE BONNIE BLUE FLAG.—A little Irishman, Harry McCarty by name, was the author of this song and made it popular by singing it to "crowded houses" throughout the South. It illustrates very well the spirit with which the South entered into the war.

THE SOLDIER BOY.—This poem, which is of no small merit, was first published in a Virginia paper and was copied widely.

Line 66: "Damascus." A city of Syria, perhaps the oldest in the world, once famous for its fine swords.

Line 81. The thought in the comparison that follows is noble. Just as this sword is handed on, so a worthy cause or sentiment is bequeathed from generation to generation.

MARGARET PRESTON.

Line 6: "The footsteps of angels drawing near." The "text" of the poem is drawn from Genesis xviii. 1-3: "And Abraham sat in the tent door in the heat of the day; and he lifted up his eyes and looked, and, lo, three men stood by him: and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent door, and bowed himself toward the ground, and said,

My Lord, if now I have found favor in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant."

THE HERO OF THE COMMUNE.—Commune de Paris, a political organization of socialists and workingmen who revolted against the French government March 17, 1871.

Notice the dramatic quality of this poem. How is it gained?

Line 1: "Garçon." A French word for "boy."

Line 46: "Sacre." A French interjection.

Line 67: "Saint Denis." The patron saint of France. He was the first bishop of Paris, and suffered martyrdom in 272.

Line 78: "Parbleu." A French interjection.

Line 79: "Ney." A famous French general (1789-1815), one of the chief officers in Napoleon's army.

Line 94: "Faith that had yearnings." Stonewall Jackson was a very devout Christian.

A GRAVE IN HOLLYWOOD CEMETERY, RICHMOND.—The grave was that of the poet, John R. Thompson, whose ill health had made him an exile.

Line 111: "Dante." The greatest Italian poet (1265-1321), who was exiled by political enemies. He died at Ravenna.

Line 131: "Mystic cable." A comparison to the ocean telegraph cable.

Line 135: "Mellow rhymes." See the specimens of Thompson's poetry given in this book.

Line 139: "Provençal-like." It was formerly the custom of the singers of Provence, France, to wander from town to town, or from castle to castle, composing and singing their lyrics.

Line 141: "Virginia's name." Thompson was a native of Virginia.

Line 144: "Whose ringing ballad." The ballad is Thompson's The Death of Stuart.

Line 145: "Bold Stuart." James Ewell Brown Stuart (1833-1864) was a famous Confederate cavalry leader who was noted for his daring raids and attacks.

FRANCIS ORRERY TICKNOR.

LITTLE GIFFEN.—The story told in this stirring poem is true. A boy from East Tennessee was nursed back to life at Torch Hill, Dr. Ticknor's home, and had scarcely returned to the rank when he fell in battle. Maurice Thompson has said of the poem: "If there is a finer lyric than this in the whole realm of poetry, I should be glad to read it."

Line 12: "Lazarus." See Luke xvi. 20.

Line 25: "Johnston." General Joseph Johnston, a Confederate leader.

Line 32: "Knights of Arthur's ring." The reference is to the companions of King Arthur, the ancient Celtic ruler, whose Round Table represents in literature the noblest phases of knighthood.

VIRGINIANS OF THE VALLEY.—This poem was written by Ticknor shortly after hearing that the Virginia soldiers had successfully resisted the invading Union forces.

Line 44: "Raleigh." Sir Walter Raleigh, the English explorer, sent colonizing expeditions to Virginia; but it is believed that he himself never came to its shores.

Line 45: "Smith." Captain John Smith was decidedly the ablest leader among the early colonists in Virginia.

Line 58: "Golden Horseshoe Knights." Early in the eighteenth century Alexander Spotswood, Governor of Virginia from 1710 to 1723, explored and took possession of the Valley of Virginia. Tradition says that he presented each one of the exploring party with a small gold horseshoe.

JOHN REUBEN THOMPSON.

MUSIC IN CAMP.—During parts of 1862 and 1863 both armies were encamped on the banks of the Rappahannock. The poem illustrates how little personal animosity exists between members of hostile armies.

Line 65: "Iris." The rainbow.

Line 76: "One touch of Nature." The expression is drawn from Shakespeare's famous line: "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." (Troilus and Cressida, III., 3.)

THE BATTLE RAINBOW.—Just after a great storm the day before the Seven Days' Fighting a rainbow spanned the Confederate camp.

Line 99: "Slipp'ry intrenchment," "reddened redoubt." Notice the poet's use of adjective to impress the idea of the dreadfulness of war.

Line 103: "Day unto day." See Psalm xix. 2. The happy phrasing of this sentence has often been pointed out.

JAMES MATHEWES LEGARE.

Line 11: "Mede." A native of Media, a country of Asia, conquered by Cyrus and made a part of Persia by him.

Line 14: "Stones for bread." See Matthew vii. 9.

Compare Ahab Mohammed with Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal and Leigh Hunt's Abou Ben Adhem.

TO A LILY.—With its dainty conceits and delicate phrasing, this poem serves as another good example of the lighter poetry of the South. Compare it with Shaw's Song, Maxwell's To a Fair Lady, Lamar's The Daughter of Mendoza, Pinkney's A Health, Cooke's Florence Vane, and Peck's Phyllis.

Line 62: "Venus." The Roman goddess of love and beauty was supposed to have sprung from the foam of the sea.

JAMES BARRON HOPE.

ARMS AND THE MAN.—The poem was delivered at the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis. The title is from the opening words of Virgil's Æneid: "Arma virumque cano."

Line 19: "Cromwell's proffered flow'rs." Cromwell endeavored to remove the New England colonists to Jamaica.

Line 24: "Reap the seas." They became fishermen and sailors.

Line 27: "Leviathan." The monster mentioned in the book of Job.

Line 35: "Changed to gold." The Middle Group, especially New York and Pennsylvania, became wealthy with astonishing rapidity.

Line 45: "Linked Silver Lakes." The expression refers to the Erie Canal, which owes its existence to the energetic Dewitt Clinton (1769-1828), once governor of New York.

Line 53: "Uppowock." An old name for tobacco.

Line 55: "Plenty's Horn." The ancient emblem, or symbol, known as the cornucopia, or horn of plenty, is contained in the seal of North Carolina.

Line 58: "Roanoke Island." In 1587 John White left a company of colonists on Roanoke Island. Upon his return from England, he could find scarcely a trace of them, and for over three centuries the mystery has remained without accurate solution. It is believed that they joined the Croatan Indians, a tribe now living in Robeson County, N. C. The traditions, speech, and family names of these Indians seem to confirm this theory.

Line 60: "Opecancanough." An Indian chief, brother of Powhatan.

Line 73: "Semi-feudal." When vast estates and slavery existed in the South, the conditions in society were somewhat like those under the ancient feudal system.

Line 86: "Golden Horse Shoes." See the note to Ticknor's Virginians of the Valley.

Line 88: "Cavaliers." Many Virginia families are descendants of the Cavaliers, who opposed Cromwell.

THE CHARGE AT BALAKLAVA.—This is the famous charge described by Tennyson in his Charge of the Light Brigade, with which Hope's poem should be compared. The battlefield is in Southern Russia, near the Black Sea, and the struggle was between the armies of England, France, Sardinia, and Turkey, on the one hand, and the Russians on the other. Through a mistake, the English light cavalry, consisting of 600 men, charged into the thick of the battle, and only 150 escaped death.

SUNSET ON HAMPTON ROADS.—These famous waters off the coast of Virginia compose one of the finest harbors in the world.

HENRY TIMROD.

SONNET.—Timrod's sonnets are among the finest in American literature. He was an ardent admirer of Wordsworth, and their sonnets are similar in their seriousness, simplicity, and clearness.

THE SUMMER BOWER.—This poem may serve as a good specimen of Timrod's Nature-poetry. It will be seen that he gains not only pleasure but a moral lesson from the beautiful scene. The moral lesson here should be compared with that in Bryant's Thanatopsis, Lanier's Sunrise, and Longfellow's Sunrise on the Hills.

CAROLINA.—Doubtless this is the finest war poem written for the Confederate cause. "In Carolina the lyrical passion of Timrod reaches its highest point; . . . its passionate fire, its lyrical charm, its pulse of stormy music, place it among the permanent contributions to American literature." (Hamilton W. Mabie, in The Outlook, 1901.)

Line 96: "Children of the hill." Timrod probably had in mind the people of the northern hill country of South Carolina. For a long time they had very little to do with the inhabitants of the Charleston section; and, indeed, the State College owes its origin to the endeavors to unite more firmly the two peoples.

Line 110: "Eutaw's battle-bed." In the Revolutionary battle at Eutaw Springs the Americans, commanded by General Green, gained the victory.

Line 114: "Rutledge," "Laurens." John Rutledge was President of South Carolina from 1776 to 1778, and was afterwards Governor. John Laurens was a young American colonel who arose from a sickbed to fight the British invaders of South Carolina, and was killed in the first conflict.

Line 117: "Marion." General Francis Marion (1732-1795), known as the "Swamp Fox," was one of the most famous leaders in the Revolutionary War. His field of action was, for the most part, in his native State, South Carolina.

Line 128: "Huns." The Asiatic tribe that invaded Rome in the fourth century. Here the name is applied to the Union troops.

Line 133: "Sachem's Head to Sumter's wall." Sachem's Head is a mountain in northwestern South Carolina; while Sumter is, of course, the famous fort near Charleston.

THE COTTON BOLL.—There is an extraordinary strength and vividness of imagination in these lines. Says Dr. Barrett Wendell in his Literary History of America: "The sense of Nature which it reveals is as fine, as true, and as simple as that which makes so nearly excellent Whittier's poems about New England landscape."

Line 205: "Cirque." Circle. Notice how the poet's imagination gradually widens until it includes the whole world.

Line 232: "Uriel." One of the seven angels that stand near God's throne. Milton, in Paradise Lost, III., 648-650, speaks of him in these words:

"The archangel Uriel, one of the seven
Who in God's presence, nearest to his throne,
Stand ready at command, and are his eyes."

Line 265: "Poet of 'The Woodlands.'" William Gilmore Simms (1806-1870), novelist, poet, and literary leader of the South before the Civil War, whose home, "The Woodlands," was near Charleston, was one of Timrod's truest and most inspiring friends.

Line 300: "Cornwall." The reference is to the tin and coal mines of Cornwall, England, which extend out under the bed of the ocean.

Line 329: "Goth." The Goths were fierce northern tribes which invaded Rome. Here the Union soldiers are meant.

Line 334: "The Port which ruled the Western seas." The "Port" is New York, which many Southerners believed was unjustly usurping American commerce.

The Cotton Boll should be compared with such poems as Lanier's Corn and Sunrise, Hayne's In the Wheat Field, Whitman's Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking, and Bayard Taylor's The Romance of Maize.

PAUL HAMILTON HAYNE.

LYRIC OF ACTION.—A man wrote Hayne, declaring that he had been saved from suicide by this poem. It is one of the few poems in which Hayne is hortatory.

Line 27: "The seraph who rules in the sun." See the note to Uriel, under the selections from Timrod. "And I saw an angel standing in the sun." (Revelation xix: 17.)

Line 37: "To seek new homes on far Italian plains." Such a migration took place in 708 B.C.

Line 38: "Apollo's oracle." Apollo was the Greek god of music and prophecy. Among his oracles the most famous was at Delphi.

Line 57: "Aëthra." The word means "clear sky."

Line 61: "Tarentum." A city, now known as Taranto, situated in Southern Italy.

MY STUDY.—This poem, which was published in 1859, refers to the poet's home at Charleston, and not to the rude cottage where he spent his later years. These lines reveal Hayne's quiet, meditative nature.

Line 73: "Arcadies." The inhabitants of Arcady, a district of Greece, were simple in their tastes and very happy; hence a place where life is exceedingly plain and happy is frequently called "Arcady."

THE MOCKING BIRD.—"There is probably no bird in the world that possesses all the musical qualifications of this king of song, who has derived all from Nature's self." (Audubon.) More than thirty of the better-known American poets have written about this bird, among them being Pike, Wilde, Meek, Timrod, Lanier, Longfellow, and Whitman. Compare Hayne's poem with Wordsworth's To the Skylark, Shelley's To a Skylark, Keats's Ode to a Nightingale, Shakespeare's Hark, Hark, the Lark, Whitman's Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking, and with the various poems about the nightingale given in this volume.

Line 96: "It rose in dazzling spirals overhead." It is a fact that the mocking bird rises, in its singing, from bough to bough, the loudest and sweetest music being produced when the top of the tree is reached.

THE PINE'S MYSTERY.—Hayne loved the pine tree. Among his poems on this subject are Under the Pines, The Axe and the Pine, In the Pine Barrens, The Dryad of the Pines, Aspect of the Pines, and The Voice of the Pines.

Line 113: "Gitana." A gypsy dancer.

Line 118: "Monotone." The reference is to the moaning sound continually produced in the pines by the wind.

JAMES RYDER RANDALL.

Line 5: "Patriotic gore." The reference is to the rioting that took place during the passage of Massachusetts troops through Baltimore, April, 1861.

Line 21: "Carroll." A Maryland patriot (1737-1832), and signer of the Declaration of Independence. He was for some time the sole survivor of the famous group whose names appear on the document.

Line 22: "Howard." John Eager Howard (1752-1827) was a Maryland officer whose troops won the battle of Cowpens.

Line 29: "Ringgold." A Maryland officer (1800-1840) who was killed at Palo Alto in the Mexican War.

Line 30: "Watson." Colonel William Watson, of Baltimore, was killed at Monterey during the Mexican War.

Line 31: "Lowe." Enoch Lewis Lowe was a soldier in the Mexican War, and afterwards Governor of Maryland.

Line 31: "May." Charles Augustus May (1817-1864), of Maryland, was a conspicuous leader at the battle of Monterey.

Line 38: "Sic semper." A portion of the Latin motto: Sic semper tyrannis ("Thus ever with tyrants").

Line 59: "Vandal." The Vandals, or Goths, were a wild Germanic tribe that plundered Rome in 455.

Line 72: "Northern scum." This expression is another instance of the unreasoning bitterness that sprang into existence just before the long conflict.

ABRAM JOSEPH RYAN.

THE CONQUERED BANNER.—This poem, which is said to have been written at Knoxville, Tenn., shortly after Lee's surrender, was first published in The Banner of the South, March, 1868.

NIGHT THOUGHTS.—When this poem was first published, in The Banner of the South, June, 1870, it bore the title, Night Thoughts; but in the volume of his collected poems it is called The Rosary of My Tears.

Line 80: "Better a day of strife." This sentiment is very true to Ryan. He was a man of great energy and passionate feelings.

THE SWORD OF ROBERT LEE.—To this day the chief heroes of the Confederate cause are Lee and Stonewall Jackson. In sincerity, earnestness, bravery, and positive manliness, the four illustrious men produced by those terrible times, Lincoln, Grant, Lee, and Jackson, have scarcely been equaled in all history.

SONG OF THE MYSTIC.—Again the sentiment is true to the poet. In this poem we see something of Ryan's life, with its passions, struggles, and final victories. Compare with it Longfellow's Psalm of Life, Newman's Lead, Kindly Light, Tennyson's Crossing the Bar, Lanier's Sunrise, and Poe's The Conqueror Worm.

SIDNEY LANIER.

A BALLAD OF TREES AND THE MASTER.—In this first selection we find two leading characteristics of Lanier: love of Nature and admiration for the pure and lofty. Undoubtedly it is one of the tenderest poems about Jesus ever written.

THE MARSHES OF GLYNN.—This is the first one of four "Marsh Hymns" composed by Lanier. It was his intention to write six. The Marshes of Glynn are in Glynn County, near Brunswick, Ga. Many poets have sung of the beauties of mountains, valleys, and seas; but Lanier, in his descriptions of marshes, or swamps, is almost alone.

Line 24: "Of the dim sweet woods, of the dear dark woods." Notice throughout the entire poem the use of alliteration, the repetition of certain combinations of sounds, the repetition of entire phrases, the internal rhymes, and the general agreement of the sound with the sense.

Line 30: "Arras." Hangings, or tapestry.

Line 31: "Pleasure of prayer." The deeply religious nature of Lanier is shown here as in many other lines of his poems. While too broad for special creeds, he was indeed a lover of what he so often called the "beauty of holiness."

Line 41: "My soul all day hath drunken the soul of the oak." This is but one of the many lines which might be quoted to show the poet's passionate love for Nature in all her forms.

Line 84: "Catholic." Broad-minded, expansive, universal.

Line 87: "As the marsh hen secretly builds on the watery sod." In all American literature there can scarcely be found lines expressing such an unfaltering trust in God.

Line 105: "Farewell, my lord Sun." These words may be compared with the last lines of Sunrise:

"Oh, never the mast-high run of the seas

Of traffic shall hide thee,

Never the hell-colored smoke of the factories

Hide thee,

Line 25: "Apollo." The god of music.

Line 26: "Astarte." Ashtoreth, the goddess of the moon, often identified with Venus, the goddess of love and beauty.

Line 28: "Dis." Pluto, the god of the dark underworld.

Line 33: "Proud, mad, but not defiant." This is a true picture of Poe until his wife's death. For some time after that catastrophe he seemed but a wreck, without pride, without ambition.

Line 40: "Israfel." The singing angel spoken of in the Koran and taken by Poe as the subject of one of his most musical poems.

Line 55: "Malice that belied him." Many of the evil reports about Poe's habits and death were originated by enemies whom he had made by his harsh literary criticisms.

THE LIGHT'OOD FIRE.—"Light'ood" is the term often used for "lightwood," or pine firewood, in the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee.

Line 71: "Boreas." The north wind.

CARLYLE MCKINLEY.

SAPALO.—Sapelo Island is near Darien, Ga.

Line 28. Five stanzas are omitted at this point.

Line 48. Two stanzas are omitted at this point.

Line 64. Six stanzas are omitted at this point.

WILL HENRY THOMPSON.

GETTYSBURG.—The battle of Gettysburg began on July 1, 1863, and continued until July 4. After one of the most desperate struggles in history, the Union forces, under General Meade, overcame the Confederates under General Robert E. Lee. The Federals took 13,621 prisoners.

Line 6: "Lee." Robert E. Lee (1807-1870), Commander in Chief of the Confederate army, graduated at the head of his class at West Point in 1829, served in the Mexican War, was Superintendent of West Point from 1852 to 1855, resigned his commission as colonel in the United States army in 1861 to take charge of the Confederate forces, and after the war became President of Washington College (afterwards Washington and Lee University), Lexington, Va.

Line 8: "Pickett." George E. Pickett (1825-1875) graduated at West Point in 1846, served through the Mexican War, and, as a Confederate general, became noted for his almost reckless bravery.

Line 13: "Shiloh." The battle of Shiloh was fought on April 6 and 7, 1862, at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn. After a most bloody struggle, General Grant overcame the Confederate leaders, A. S. Johnston and Beauregard.

Line 14: "Chickamauga." On September 19 and 20, 1863, the Confederates, under Bragg, met the Federals, under Rosecrans, at Chickamauga, about twelve miles east of Chattanooga, and, after heavy losses had been sustained by both armies, the Union troops retired.

Line 17: "Pettigrew." James Johnston Pettigrew (1828-1863), a brigadier general of Confederate forces, was badly wounded at Gettysburg, where he had charge of a division.

Line 20: "Waterloo." On June 18, 1815, the forces of England, Holland, Belgium, Hanover, Brunswick, Nassau, Prussia, Saxony, and other European States, under the command of Wellington and Blücher, met Napoleon's army near Waterloo, in Belgium, and routed it.

Line 21: "Kemper." James Lawson Kemper (1823-1895), a brigadier general in the Confederate army, was severely wounded and was captured at Gettysburg.

Line 22: "Garnett." Robert Selden Garnett (1821-1861) was a Confederate officer killed at Carrick's Ford.

Line 25: "Armistead." Lewis A. Armistead, a brigadier general in the Confederate army, was killed at Gettysburg.

Line 35: "Doubleday." General Abner Doubleday (1820-1893) had charge of a Union corps at Gettysburg.

IRWIN RUSSELL.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT IN THE QUARTERS.—This poem appeared in Scribner's Magazine January, 1878. The "quarters" was the term formerly applied to the group of negro cabins on the plantation.

Line 46: "Buck-kannon." Buchanan. It was formerly a custom to name oxen after the Presidents.

Line 59: "'Tis books that show us how to think." In this line Russell gives a sharp rap at our modern ideas concerning the importance of books in the development of an educated, thinking man. Is he right or wrong?

Line 81: "You knows." Notice the unconventional way of addressing God. The Creator was a most personal God to the old-time negro preacher.

Line 91: "A-feelin' like King David when he cut de pigeon wing." "And David danced before the Lord with all his might." (2 Samuel vi. 14.)

Line 101: "We'll need de blessin' more'n ef we's doin' right." Is there any defect in this logic?

Line 103: "Sheriffs." Seraphs.

Line 112: "Sound his A." The "A" string is the one to which the other violin strings are tuned.

Line 147: "Georgy Sam." It is still a custom among the negroes to place before the name of a conspicuous character the name of his native State.

Line 189: "Herald." The reference is probably to the Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald, a paper for which Russell did some work.

Line 191: "Natchez." A famous steamboat on the Mississippi.

Line 198: "Morgan." A large and exceedingly strong breed of horses.

Line 203: "Bitters." A drink composed mainly of rum.

Line 240: "He climbs the fence." Notice the lack of dignity in Santa Claus's departure.

HENRY JEROME STOCKARD.

Line 3: "Triton." A god of the sea.

Line 3: "Nereids." Sea nymphs.

Line 4: "Poseidon." Neptune, lord of the sea.

Line 5: "Pan." A god of the Greek shepherds, and later a war god.

YATES SNOWDEN.

Line 60: "Drap d'été." Clothes in the latest fashion.

Line 66: "Émigré." Emigrant.

Line 73: "Loyal je serai durant ma vie." I shall be loyal throughout my life.

MADISON CAWEIN.

Line 66: "Thou wouldst not have her weep." This is the idea, which has persisted through all ages, that the souls of the departed rejoice and sorrow with the living. The sentiment is expressed in a masterly manner in Rossetti's The Blessed Damozel.

Line 80: "Hast thou not all, all that thou ever hadst?" The expression refers, of course, to the nature, or soul, of a fellow-being, the part that we really love. Although the flesh may disappear in death, the characteristics and the personality of the departed live on in our memory. Is there much consolation, however, in this thought to one who has lost a friend? Do we not mourn, to no small degree, for the loss of the fleshly form?

LIZETTE WOODWORTH REESE.

Line 1: "Brambles." Notice throughout the poem one of the main characteristics of Southern poetry—a sincere love for Nature. The luxuriant vegetation and noble scenery have lost none of that effect which in the past inspired Pike, Timrod, Hayne, Lanier, and a host of others.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

- American Anthology.* Stedman. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.
American Authors. Rutherford. Franklin Publishing Co.
American Literature. Hart. Eldridge Brothers.
American Sonnets. Stedman. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.
American Encyclopedia. D. Appleton & Co.
Bivouac of the Dead and Its Author. Ranck.
Cyclopedia of American Biography. D. Appleton & Co.
Ballad History of the American Revolution. Moore.
Colonial Literature. Trent and Wells.
Colonial and Revolutionary Periods. Tyler.
Contemporaries. Higginson.
Cyclopedia of American Literature. Duychinck.
DeBow's Commercial Review.
Dictionary of Authors. Allibone.
Essays and Notes. Bayard Taylor.
Female Poets of America. Griswold.
Golden Leaves from American Poets. (Boston, 1865.)
History of Virginia. Cooke. (American Commonwealth Series.)
History of Southern Literature. Holliday. Neale Co.
In the Poe Circle. Benton.
Library of American Literature. Stedman and Hutchinson. Charles L. Webster & Co.
Library of the World's Best Literature. Warner. R. S. Peale and J. A. Hill.
Life of William Gilmore Simms. Trent. (American Men of Letters Series.)
Life of Poe. Woodberry. (American Men of Letters Series.)
Life of Lanier. Mims. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.
Life, Literary Labors, and Neglected Grave of R. H. Wilde. Jones.
Literary History of America. Wendell.

- Literati of New York.* Poe.
- Literature of the Virginias.* Ogden. Independent Publishing Co.
- Living Writers of the South.* Davidson. (New York, 1869.)
- Louisiana Studies.* Fortier. F. F. Hansell. (New Orleans.)
- Memorial of Sidney Lanier.* Gilman.
- Mind and Art of Poe.* Fruit.
- National Cyclopedia of American Biography.* James F. White & Co.
- Negro Minstrelsy, Ancient and Modern.* Trux.
- New International Encyclopedia.* Dodd, Mead & Co.
- Oddities in Southern Life and Character.* Watterson.
- Pioneers of Southern Literature.* Link.
- Poets and Poetry of America.* Griswold.
- Poets of America.* Stedman.
- Publications of Modern Language Association.*
- Publications of the Mississippi Historical Society.*
- Questions at Issue.* Gosse.
- Sewanee Review.* (Sewanee, Tenn.)
- Slave Songs of the United States.* Allen, Ware, and Garrison.
- Songs and Ballads.* Moore.
- Songs of the Slave.* Brown.
- Songs of the South.* Clark. Lippincott.
- South Atlantic Quarterly.* (Durham, N. C.)
- Southern Literary Messenger* (1834-1863).
- Southern Writers.* Trent. Macmillan Co.
- Southern Writers Series.* Baskervill.
- Southland Writers.* Raymond.
- Southern Literature.* Manly. B. F. Johnson Publishing Company.
- Southern Quarterly Review.* (1842-1855.)
- Southern Review.* (Baltimore.)
- Southern Poetry Prior to 1860.* B. F. Johnson Publishing Company.
- Southern Poets.* Abernathy. Maynard, Merrill & Co.

Southern Poets. Weber. Macmillan Company.

Southern Writers. Baskervill.

The Holy Grail. Scherer. Lippincott Company.

The Land We Love. (1865-1869.)

The Old South. Page.

Under the Microscope. Swinburne.

War Songs and Poems of the Southern Confederacy.

Wharton. (Philadelphia.)

Women of the South in Literature. Forrest.

Younger American Poets. Sladen.

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Epigram Imitated from		High Tide at Gettysburg,
Archias, An.....	44	The	191
Eulogy of George Wash-		Homer	216
ington, The.....	32	Hope, James Barron.....	133
Every Year... ..	86	Hymns of the Marshes... ..	175
Expansion, The Period		Hymns to the Gods.....	82
of	47
		I
F		Immortality	39
Farewell to America, A..	51	In a King-Cambyses Vein.	186
Florence Vane.....	92	In de Mornin'.....	110
From Cliff and Scaur....	223	In Sorrow's Hour.....	228
Froissart Ballads.....	92	Israfil	67
		I Wonder What Maud
G		Will Say.....	207
General Surveys.
15, 29, 49, 105, 171		J
God's Acres.....	94	Jackson, Stonewall.....	119
Grady, Henry.....	171	Joy and Other Poems....	219
Grapevine Swing, The.62,	209
Grave in Hollywood		K
Cemetery, Richmond, A	120	Key, Francis Scott.....	40
		Knot of Blue, A.....	207
H
Half-Ring Moon, The....	185	L
Harris, Joel Chandler....	197	Lamar, Mirabeau Bona-
Harrison, Mrs. Burton..	159	parte	53
Hayne, Paul Hamilton.		Land of the South.....	88
123, 141, 152		Lanier, Sidney.....	141, 173
Hayne, William Hamil-		Last of the Hours, The..	94
ton	212	Lay Dis Body Down.....	111
Health, A.....	55	Legaré, James Mathewes.	130
Heart's Quest, The.....	186	Legends and Lyrics.....	153
Heaven	109	Life of Hugh S. Legaré.	153
He Goes to Court.....	26	Life of Robert Y. Hayne.	153
He Meets a Quaker....	25	Light on the Hills.....	214
Hero of the Commune,		Light'ood Fire, The.....	184
The	118	Lines to a Lady.....	58
		Little Folks Down South.	213

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Little Giffen.....	123	On the Late S. T. Cole- ridge	40
Longfellow, Henry Wads- worth	152	Orta-Undis	130
Lost Pleiad, The.....	62	Outcast and Other Poems, The	229
Love and a Day.....	227
Lyric of Action.....	154	P
Lyrics and Idylls.....	224	Page, Thomas Nelson... 197
M		Partisan, The..... 61
Mabie, Hamilton Wright. 153, 175		Peck, Samuel Minturn... 206
Malone, Walter..... 229		Period of Expansion, The	47
Marshes of Glynn, The.. 175		Phyllis	210
Maryland, My Maryland. 112		Pike, Albert..... 82
Maxwell, William..... 43		Pine's Mystery, The.... 157
McKinley, Carlyle..... 188		Pinkney, Edward Coate.. 54
Meek, Alexander Beau- fort	88	Plantation Melodies..... 107
Mocking Bird, The...90, 156		Poe, Edgar Allan. 65, 141, 152
Mountain of the Lovers, The	153	Poems by Amelia..... 97
Mourner's Song..... 108		Poe's Cottage at Ford- ham	182
Munford, William..... 36		Portrait of Henry Tim- rod, A.....	229
Music and Poetry..... 174		Prentice, George Denison. 57
Music in Camp..... 126		Preston, Margaret..... 116
My Maryland..... 159		Procne's Revenge..... 21
My Star..... 186
My Study..... 156		R
N		Randall, James Ryder... 158
Newes from Virginia.... 17		Raven, The..... 73
New South, The..... 169		Red Eagle..... 88
Night Thoughts..... 164		Red Leaves and Roses... 224
O		Reese, Lizette Wood- worth	228
October	158	Resignation	34
O'Hara, Theodore..... 98		Revolutionary Period, The	27
Old Songs and New.... 116

	PAGE.		PAGE.
Rich, R.....	17	Sonnet	142
Roll, Jordan, Roll.....	108	Sot-Weed Factors, The..	25
Rosa Lee.....	92	Southrons, Hear Your
Russell, Irwin.....	196	Country Call You.....	112
Russell's Magazine.....	152	Spirit and the Wood
Ryan, Abram Joseph....	161	Sparrow, The.....	222
S
Sandys, George.....	20	Stanton, Frank Lebby....	213
Sapelo	189	Stanzas	50
Sass, George Herbert... 186		Star - Spangled Banner,
Savannah Freeman's Song.		The	41
	110	Stars Begin to Fall.....	111
Science of English Verse,		Stockard, Henry Jerome.	215
The	174	Stoddard, Richard Henry.	142
Sea Mark, The.....	19	Summer Bower, The....	143
Serenade, A.....	57	Sunrise	174
Shade of the Trees, The.	119	Sunset on Hampton
Shaw, John.....	38	Roads	140
Simms, William Gilmore.		Sw in b u r n e, Algernon
	61, 152	Charles	152
Sledd, Benjamin.....	223	Swing Low, Sweet Char-
Sleep and His Brother		iot	109
Death	212	Sword of Robert Lee,
Smith, John.....	19	The	165
Snowden, Yates.....	216	T
Soldier Boy, The.....	115	Tabb, John Banister....	185
Song	38	Taylor, Bayard.....	152
Song in March.....	64	There'll Come a Day....	122
Song of the Chattahoo-		Thompson, John Reu-
chee	174, 180	ben	125
Song of the Mystic.....	166	Thompson, Maurice.....	191
Songs and Poems of the		Thompson, Will Henry..	191
South	88	Three Summer Studies..	137
Songs from Dixie Land..	213	Ticknor, Francis Orrery.	122
Songs of Dusk and Dawn.	229	Tiger Lilies.....	174
Songs of North and		Timrod, Henry.....	141, 152
South	229	To a Fair Lady.....	43
		To a Lily.....	132

	PAGE.		PAGE.
To Anne.....	43	Virginians of the Valley.	124
To a Seashell.....	97	Votive Song.....	56
To My Daughter Lily...	92
To One in Paradise.....	79	W
To Spring.....	84	Wallis, Severn Teackle..	94
To the Mocking Bird..51,	82	Warren's Last Words...	33
Triumph of Hector, The.	36	Watchers of the Hearth,
Triumph of Music.....	224	The	223
Truth and Reason.....	94	Welby, Amelia	97
Tucker, St. George.....	34	Wharton, Charles Henry.	31
Twilight at Sea.....	97	Whippoorwill, The.....	224
		Whittier, John Greenleaf.	152
U		Wilde, Richard Henry..	50
Up from Georgia.....	213	Wilson, Robert Burns....	194
Upon a Purple Cap.....	22
		Y
V		Yemassee, The.....	61
Vale of Tempe, The....	224	Youth and Age.....	45
Virginia Hearts of Oak..	30	Yule Log, The.....	212

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY
BERKELEY

Return to desk from which borrowed.
This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

11 Jan 50 NB
17 Dec '52 KF
DEC 3 1952 LU

LIBRARY USE

JAN 16 1955

JAN 16 1955 LU

1 Apr '59 FW

REC'D LD

MAR 19 1959

28 Apr 59

REC'D LD

APR 28 1961

JUN 7 1970 65

REC'D LD MAY 24 70 -5 PM

ML47636

918u

H 739

t hr

THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

